HOME AT LAST.

In all my wanderings round this world of care,
In all my griefs and God has given my share,
I still had hopes my latest hours to crown,
Amid these humble bowers to lay me down;
To husband out life's taper to its close,
And keep the flame from wasting by repose;
I still had hope, for pride attends us still,
Among the swains to show my book-learn'd skill,
Around the fire, an evening group to draw,
And tell of all I felt and all I saw;
And as a hare, when hounds and horns pursue,
Pants to the place from whence at first she flew,
I still had hope, my long vexations past,
Here to return, and die at home at last.
THOMPSON.

The Laird and the Poor Widow.

"Na, na, laird, I'll never consent to sic a daft like thing. Frail as I am, an' unfit for fashten' wi' that everlastin' rheumatism, I can still [grade be thankit], carry hame my bits o' stick without ony help. Lash me, man, if our neebors were tae see the Laird o' Stanyrigge wi' a burden o' whins on his back what a gay-like clatter and clishmaclaverin' there wad be about it!"

"Let them e'en clatter an' clever awa till their gabs get dreigh, Mrs. M'Leechine for the Laird o' Stanyrigge cares na a pich o' snuff what they say. Lay ye doon ye'r burden, lucky, an' I'll put it on my ain shoothers, an' carry it hame for ye. Poir body, I see ye are tired enough o't already."

"Deed am I, laird. I'm gettin' auld noo, an' I've tint my strength, but still an' on, 'for a' that an' a' that,' as the auld sang says, I'd rather beak my back wi't than see a born gentleman like yersel' put a finger to it."

The foregoing colloquy took place one afternoon in the end of autumn between our esteemed friend, the late Laird of Stanyrigge, and a poor widow, who lived by herself in a small cottage on his estate. The laird was an old gentleman of a short, stout, rather corpulent construction, with a very round, fat, rosy face. He was dressed in plain back clothes, which were a little seedy in appearance, and by far too tight to be comfortable. His hat might suggest the idea that he, or some other person or persons, had beat using it as a foot-ball. It had a very ruffled appearance, and was as coloured as an old polecher. His disposition was naturally kind and generous yet it was also peculiar and extremely eccentric. He was ever ready to help the poor, and relieve them from their distresses yet he also dearly loved to play innocent tricks upon them, and have if possible, a hearty laugh at their expense. On the present occasion, having met Mrs. M'Leechlan, trudging home under a very heavy load of sticks and yearn, a quean idea had taken root in his old cranium. He requested the widow to let him carry her burden for her; the widow, as we have seen, refused to listen to such a proposal, but just when she had finished her second speech on the subject, the laird, determined to have his own way in spite of everything, lifted the sticks from off her back, and was about to transfer them to his own, when she, crying out, "Na, na, laird, ye shanna get them; lent a bit o' yo," turned quickly round, and began to tug them from his hands. A fair trial of strength now took place between these two individuals, the laird endeavouring to retain what he had, while the widow as strenuously endeavoured to take it from him.—The sun pulled this way, and the other pulled that way, until they were both red in the face with their exertions. At last, the worthy laird, giving vent to a loud 'ha, ha,' very suddenly let go his hold of the burden, and this caused honest Lucky M'Leechlan to lose her equilibrium, and fall backward with a heavy thump on the ground. Without waiting to see whether or not she was able to rise again, the laird snatched up the bundle of sticks, and proceeded with all diligence in the direction of her cottage. Arrived at that domicile, he laid down his burden, put his brand back to the door, and soon forced it to fly open. On entering he laid down the sticks at the fireside, and began to kindle a blaze. Soon the jolly flames burst forth on the hearth, and the sticks kissed and crackled with the heat, while the transient sparks flew up the chimney, and vanished with the smoke. Already it was a better fire than that ancient cottage had seen for many a day; yet, still the laird kept heaping on more and more fuel, till at last the whole bundle of sticks was on, and the broad flames went roaring up the chimney with a sense that looked destruction. The widow was sitting on a stone near the spot where the laird had left her. Her full had brought on an attack of rheumatism, and the poor woman was in a state of intense bodily anguish. By chance however, she lifted up her eyes in the direction of her habitation, and behold, to her dismay, a dense volume of smoke ascending from the chimney. Quick as thought, if not quicker, she started to her feet, forgetful for the time with her rheumatism, and flew with wonderful speed to save her house hold treasures from the devouring flames. She did not take the best road, but certainly the least the straightest, and if we were to examine the number of ditches, and stone dikes she cleared, without once breaking a bone or tumbling down a stone, as one would believe us. Flushed, and breathless and frightened, she rushed in at the door, just in time to see the Laird of Stanyrigge coolly but precipitately walking out (due to her as it herself) to the imploring shower of "In the name o' goodness, laird, what does't's this ye're about? D'ye want to ruin a puir auld widow with like me?" But the words were suffocated by the blast, which now began dispersing ashes, sparks, coals, cods, wool, bellows, tongs, and everything in a world by head an' heels the last party fared by.

"The deil ? the man," quoth Mrs. M'Leechlan, who was now almost choking with rage (and no wonder) at such direful proceeding); "the deil ? the man," and, seizing her "chopping stick," she dealt him a blow on the crown of the hat, which knocked that article down over his eyes, and knocked the laird down likewise, and left him sprawling like a small quadruped on the floor.

The flames had by this time caught hold of the roof, and were making fearful havock among the thatch. Some of the birds tenantry, who had beheld the smoke from afar, rushed with all haste to the cottage, and the foremost of them arrived in time to witness Mrs. M'Leechlan unceremoniously belabouring the prostrate form of the worthy Laird of Stanyrigge with her heavy chopping stick.

"Hand off, noo, ye auld besom that ye are I" cried the man, wrenching the weapon from her hand, "D'ye want to murder the best frien' ye ever had I" Without waiting for an answer to his question, he thrust her out at the door, and told another man who had arrived to take charge of her. He next assisted the laird to regain his feet and to extract his hand out of his old hat, pushing him at the same time into the open air, for the house had now filled with smoke and was getting very dangerous.

"The deil's the man I" cried Lucky M'Leechlan once more; "what could tempt him to burn a puir, helpless woman's house in that way! He's surely cracked! To burn the auld house where John an' myself lived for mony a blissful year; where his faither, an' his grandfaither, and his great-grandfaither, and mony mair forbye, wi' their sisters an' brithers an' bairns, were born and brought up; where mony o' them lived happily a' their days, workin' early an' late for daily bread, and died when the one o' death ean, as my ain John (rest his honest' banes!) die'd sax year ago come the five an' twentieth day of the nenst month but two, an' where"——

"Tute, Mrs. M'Leechlan, gie up ye're clatter; what's the use o' yer yeap, yarpin' in that way! Dinna the house belong to the laird, an' can he no do what he likes wi' his ain ?" This was put by one of the few old women which the fire had brought together. She whispered something else in the widow's ear, which had the effect of producing a wonderful change for the better on that individual's behaviour. "What a stupid gowk I am," she said, drying her tears with her apron, "no to hae seen that before! But what's me, nenseen, he'll mayor forgi'e me for strikin' him wi' the chappin' stick."

The Laird of Stanyrigge had made his exit from the scene as soon as he was brought outside. The people who had gathered did all they could to extinguish the flames, but all in vain. There was a high wind blowing at the time, and the fire spread with such rapidity, that the little cottage was burned to the ground in ten minutes.—During the next week, Mrs. M'Leechlan found a home with one of her neighbors; and at the end of that time the laird had a new cottage built for her in the place where the old one had been. Every old thing burned by the fire was replaced by something new—from the spinning-wheel and the dresser, down to the ladle and the horn spoons.

This is a sample of the laird's eccentricities. On seeing that the poor woman's cottage was out of repair, he determined to give her a better, and that was the way he set about it. Well were it for this country, and for the poor who live in it, were there more men like the late Laird of Stanyrigge amongst us.

NAMES OF THE MONTHS.

The names of the months were given by the Romans.

January, the first month was so called from Janus an ancient King of Italy, who was deified after his death and is derived from the Latin word Janarius.

February, the second month, is derived from the Latin word Febreo, to purify; hence Februaris, for this month the ancient Romans offered an expiatory sacrifice for the purifying of the people.

March, the third month, anciently the first months, is derived from the Latin word Mars, the god of war.

April, so called from the Latin Aperire, that is opening, because in this month the vegetable world opens and buds forth.

May, the fifth month is derived from the Latin word Majores, so called by Romulus in respect towards the senators; hence Majes or May.

June, the sixth month, from the Latin word Junius or the youngest of the people.

July, the seventh month, is derived from the Latin word Julius, and so named in honor of Julius Cæsar.

August, the eighth month, was so called in honor of Augustus, by a decree of the Roman Senate, A. D. 8.

September, the ninth month, from the Latin word Septem, or seven, being the seventh month from March.

October, the tenth month, from the Latin word Octo, eight, hence October.

November, the eleventh month, from the Latin word Novem, nine; the ninth month from March.

December, the twelfth month, from the Latin word Decem, ten; so called because it was the tenth month from March, which was probably the manner of beginning the year.

The following inscription is said to have been on a head-board at a grave, in the Sierra Diggins, California:

"Sacred

[illegible]
with a sad fate
[illegible]

THE ROSE.

Perch'd on a tender stem close by a shady path,
I first beheld the light of earth's fair sun,
Tost by the wind's tempestuous wrath,
This my life on earth began.

Protected by green leaves through early spring,
I dared not burst the bonds that shuttered me,
Till laughing June, the time that birds do sing,
Dispell'd all fears of frost and set me free.

I then in stately splendor opened forth,
Scenting the air with nature's sweet perfume,
Trembling lest some ruthless hand should be Stretched forth to seal my earthly doom.

Thus the first few hours of life passed by Thinking the world all beauty, joy and love,
Not knowing disappointment shared a part,
Of what was meant for blessings from above.

Reminding pleasing strangers of their youthful days,
When by a cottage in some distant land,
The rose was sweet to Beauty each succeeding spring,
Watered and cared for by an angel mother's hand.

But I was doomed to an untimely death,
Caused by a blushing maiden's snow-white hand,
And for her lover's sake was kissed and given,
With fragrance upon for a token golden band.

This fatal deed was done and that simple ring
No doubt intended for their wedding day,
Was given for me a pale and pallid rose,
In token of remembrance when far away.

But now I'm withered, yet preserved with care,
Although my former owner she has gone above,
To join the mighty throng of angels there,
Proclaiming nought is known in Heaven but love.

THE POSITION OF PETERBORO'.

No 2.

SIR,—I find by the remarks of "Mr. T. Stubbot that I have failed in at least one quarter, and on one point, when shaping a satisfactory expression of opinion on the subject of my letter upon a fortnight back.

To have accomplished any thing beyond this would, indeed, have been a thing of wonderment and self glorification; and disappointment if I now extend my observation beyond the range of my original intention, has no place in the inducements prompting my resumption or extension of expression.

I will not treat the response next to my remarks as that of an adversary nor opponent—for neither has he rendered himself by not recognising my views or by preferring in his partizan treatment of a whole that which more especially interests himself—nor shall I, I hope, be betrayed into any observation that is not perfectly harmonious with the intentions of his own utterance or action. In addressing you he subscribes a name which—like him I make free to suppose is assumed—for I cannot persuade myself that he holds a dead, or has a note subscribed under that word, but I am perfectly satisfied to dwell a while on the matter under treatment in the acceptance of his name as he writes it, and farther to write what I think as though Mr. S. were really what his baggage would seem to imply, i. e. a new-mill owner, or worker of a mill.

My endeavour if not immediately directed to answering a question of his relative to a further supply of saw logs, will be exhibitive to some little extent of my views thereupon—while in all good feeling venturing to submit that your querist has about as fair grounds for asking where funds are to be found for meeting his coming note in my bank—or the Editor for his writers proceeding, should he go into the woods, as for this suppositively offered question!

Before proceeding to the purpose before me, let me assure the worthy personage that he err if he supposes me negligent of the very obvious capabilities presented by the river for factory or mill propulsion.

The stream was launched to me when the glorious volume of its power had already direction to but two very incapable wheels, and when, instead of being confined as it now is with its tributes ere said their mill, a thin thread of new shale only among the current in deemed of, to already completed force to such operations. With this upon memory—the river before me as it is, and under my notice a knowledge of what is contemplated by various persons in proposed undertakings, it is somewhat unlikely that I should be so dull as to overlook the importance of the Otonabee as Peterboro's and Ashburnham's conserving and diligent observer and dredge.

It cannot be necessary of me to say that as usage if nothing else ensures to the opposite shadow an early a passage as the meaning gleam of being made before the eye of the round or saw logs is communicated upon the prospect of the former; depends the annual journey of the latter. While the dreams for this week, no assurance [illegible] that the week, nothing is quite certain but the [illegible] to [illegible] of [illegible] with the [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] of yet in embryo, and as they will be slow in coming, from the scarcity of the soil, I would advise him to beware of autumnal frosts; they are very hurtful to green crops.

Dear Mr. T., if it be my intent
To murder Genius or his near relations,
Take my advice and rest in calm content,
You run no risk of speedy immolation.
The difference between you both
Would take, of Irish cranes, a dozen dances
To trace it up, and then their true report
Would be, "The gentlemen ain't handsome enough."

As to my "illogical expression," I never wrote it. My words were: If it (the solution) had a chance of being understood. And if any candid person place the problem and the solution side by side, as both appear in your paper, he must admit that I was justified in saying more than I did say. I still maintain that the conditions are not complied with. In his communication, however, he has given us a peep behind the scenes. What a pity he had not Colenso to consult for 23, 22, 9, or 6. Mr. Stratten's solution of 23 upsets one of his impeachments; the other is also down by the mere head. Is he (Mr. S.) also intent on murder? Mr. S.'s answer is correct. The problem I took from an English paper, in which it was incorrectly solved. After setting it myself, I sent it to you, and to Oshawa, that I might have the opinion of others as well as my own. Mr. S.'s answer corresponds with mine, and I have the fullest confidence in his ability and integrity. Mr. F.'s so-called solution of 23 is in good keeping, however, with that of 22, which, though the answer is correct, is not obtained by "plain arithmetic," but by a schoolboy trick, which, in a schoolboy, would deservedly be paid with the tawse. 23 can be done by "plain arithmetic."

Ah! if you then, dear Edwin, think
In dignity to rise,
From Helicon you need to drink,
Woo your Pegasus flies.
And for that "Chaplet,"—thank you, sir,
I never sighed for that one;
I'd rather wear the simplest wreath
That blooms on Mr. Stratten,
So keep your Chaplet, Mr. Ford,
In truth I would not wear it,
It well befits the brassy brow
By nature formed to bear it.

I am, &c.,

EDWARD ROTHWELL.

[We would request the parties engaged in this controversy to study brevity in writing, and avoid personalities. There is too much disposition to depart from the merits of the question at issue. As Mr. Rothwell throws upon us the responsibility of the "illogical expression," which occurred in his former communication, we can only say that we followed the "copy" to the letter, a rule which we adhere to in the above production. The grammatical errors which occur in the above communication are his own. A number of solutions and problems are necessarily laid over for another publication.—EDITOR EXAMINER.]

EXECUTION OF THE REV. JACOB S. HARDEN.

(From the N. Y. Tribune July 7.)

At 1¼ o'clock yesterday, Jacob S. Harden, who has been fifteen months in prison, was executed in the yard attached to the jail at Belvidere, Warren County, N. J. The crime for which this man was doomed to death has occupied so prominent a place in the journals of late, that it is needless to repeat the details of the murder at this time. Suffice it to say, that after a long and well-conducted trial, he was found guilty of having administered to his wife a quantity of arsenic, which resulted in her death. He then fled to Virginia, was suspected, sent for and arrested, and on being brought back was placed upon trial to answer for her murder. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be hung on the 28th day of June. From that he was respited to July 6, and on that day the sentence was duly executed.

Jacob S. Harden was born at Blairstown N. J., of very respectable parents, both of whom are still residing in the immediate neighborhood. Jacob, at the time of his execution, was a little less than 23 years of age. He commenced life as a school teacher but in consequence of the liberties he was in the habit of taking with his female pupils incurred the displeasure of their parents, and was at length obliged to relinquish that calling. He then became a Methodist circuit preacher, and for two years or more thereupon set foot the northern section of the State in which he was born, preaching in the various towns and villages on the route. He became quite noted as an exhorter, and was exceedingly successful as a camp-meeting preacher. The title of Rev. does not belong to him by right, he never having been ordained as a minister, but acted only as an associate or circuit preacher. Since his trial it has been ascertained that his iniquitous career was commenced before he became a preacher of the Gospel, and was pursued by him at all times. The confession which he has written and desired to have published for the benefit of his father, is said to contain so much scandal that its publication as written has been deemed inadvisable. It has therefore been submitted to two clergymen who are now engaged in revising it.—After having shown himself competent as a circuit preacher, he was at length called upon to preside over a congregation at Mount Lebanon. With much apparent hesitation on his part, he accepted the call, and entered upon his duties.

It was while so engaged at Mount Lebanon that he was married to Miss Catherine Horton, a young lady with whom he had attended school. There had been much difficulty between Mr. Harden and Miss Horton previous to their marriage, and it was only in consequence of them having been so much scandalized in regard to them as to attract the attention of the Methodist Conference that he submitted to the union. Mrs. Harden is represented to have been a very pretty woman, about 20 years of age, and was to him a loving and true kind wife. Scarcely had they been married a year when the untimely sickness and death. So peculiar were the circumstances attending her death, that physicians immediately consulted in Mr. Harden and he subsequently fled to Virginia, where he was discovered mowing wheat under an assumed name. With the particulars of his flight, which was but recently ascertained, our readers are familiar.

On the 28th previous to the execution the town of Belvidere, where the murderer was confined, was crowded with citizens. Every hotel was overflowing with people from the country and neighboring towns, many of whom were compelled to take lodging upon the floor. The lodge of excitement was at its height on the night previous to the execution. Crowds were constantly passing and repassing the jail. On the morning of Friday the Court House, in which a cell for the prisoner was constructed, by an arrangement of the jail, was opened for the admission of the people. The Court House is situated on the north side of the public square, and is a large two-story brick building, with a cupola in the centre. The jail is a small stone building, standing in the rear of the Court House, and is connected with it by a covered passage-way. The cell in which the prisoner was confined is in the second story of the jail, and is entered from the passage-way. It is a small room, about 12 feet square, with a window in the north side, and a door in the west side. The window is protected by a heavy iron grating, and the door by a double set of bars. The cell is furnished with a bed, a chair, and a table, on which were a Bible and hymn book. Harden was constantly attended by the Rev. Mr. Day, the Methodist minister of Belvidere, and by the Rev. Mr. Kirk, a Presbyterian clergyman, who had been with him almost constantly since his conviction. Mr. Day had been with him during the night, and was with him when he arose in the morning. Harden had passed a restless night, and was very much depressed in spirits. He had been informed that his wife had been buried on the previous day, and that the funeral services had been performed by the Rev. Mr. Kirk. This seemed to affect him very much, and he wept bitterly. He was then informed that the hour for his execution had been fixed at 1 o'clock, and that the Sheriff would be with him at 12. He then requested that he might be left alone with Mr. Day, and that Mr. Kirk might be sent for. Mr. Kirk was accordingly sent for, and Mr. Day left the cell. Mr. Kirk remained with him about an hour, when Mr. Day returned, and they remained with him until the Sheriff arrived. Harden was then dressed in a dark blue coat, pants, and vest, and a white shirt with a turn-over collar, and light cravat were placed on his head. He appeared like a man who was about to undergo a surgical operation. He trembled from head to foot, and was very pale. He was then informed that the hour had arrived, and that he must prepare for immediate death. He requested the Rev. Mr. Day to pray with him for the last time, and for full half an hour they were so occupied. At 12¾ he appeared in the prison yard, his arms tightly bound him, walking by the side of Sheriff Stewart, and followed by the two clergymen who had attended him, he seemed, and a physician. They entered the enclosure, and Harden glanced at the crowd beneath him. He was a cool looking young man, having a clear complexion and dark eyes. His hair was dark chestnut. He stood about five feet seven inches, was very athletic, and weighed about 150 pounds. He was dressed in a dark blue coat, pretty buttoned over his chest, black pants, dark velvet vest, white shirt with a turn-over collar, and light cravat over it. He appeared like a man who was void of his usual composure and self-possession. Having reached the centre of the platform, he knelt down with his friends, and prayed. His language was not audible to those on the ground. He had evidently "Lord Jesus have mercy on me" and support me in this trying hour," during the only words heard. He then arose, and was assisted up the steps, in company with the Sheriff, and gave his last farewell to those about the scaffold, which he declined to speak himself. He then took his seat on one of the chairs placed there for the purpose, and the Sheriff proceeded to pinion his arms and legs. This was done in a firm manner, and he was then assisted to his feet, and the rope was adjusted around his neck. The white cap was then drawn over his face, and the rope fastened to the beam overhead. The Sheriff then descended from the platform, and the drop fell, and Harden was suspended in the air, having fallen with a sudden jerk about three feet and a half. His dying struggles were very brief, and long continued. The legs were frequently drawn up to the body, the hands and legs twitched convulsively, and his efforts to catch his breath could be heard all over the prison yard. After hanging about ten minutes the attending physician left his pulse, and found that the heart was still beating. At 1.05 he was pronounced quite dead.

At the end of half an hour the body was cut down, and after the usual examination and verdict by the Coroner's Jury, was placed in a coffin and delivered to his relatives. The coffin was of mahogany, silver mounted, bearing on a silver-plate the simple inscription "Jacob S. Harden." The remains were taken to the residence of his father about twelve miles distant, where the funeral services will be performed to-day.

And thus passed away Jacob S. Harden, a young man of fine talents, but possessing a mind which was not well balanced. Those who knew him before the commission of the crime for which he died, say that he was not vicious in the slightest degree, but was thoughtless and reckless, and committed his sins, not so much from a deliberate desire to do evil as from thoughtlessness at the moment and recklessness as to the consequences. The deliberate and premeditated murder of his young wife, who, at the moment of taking the poison he had prepared for her, was sitting on his lap and receiving his caresses, would seem to show a mind capable of committing any crime.

Among the crowd who witnessed the execution, were several of the witnesses who testified against him at the trial. There were also several women among the spectators in the prison yard, while many others were exceedingly indignant because they were not admitted. The father and brother of Mrs. Harden were also in the crowd, and anxious to see his murderer pay the penalty of his crime. After the execution many of those who were inside the jail, hastened to pay a visit to the cell formerly occupied by him. The cell had been comfortably arranged, and contained a bed, table, small stand, two or three chairs, etc. His table was well supplied with religious books, bearing evident marks of constant reading. The walls of his cell were entirely covered over with the various illustrated papers, all of which had been pasted up by himself.—His conduct during imprisonment was always gentlemanly and courteous, and he had won the esteem of the Sheriff and keepers to that degree that it seemed to them like losing an old friend when they bade him. Very little sympathy was expressed by the people of that vicinity for him, except by a few of that class of females who delighted to sing psalms beneath his windows. All about him expressed the greatest horror of his crime, and many, who would be unwilling to see the execution of another man, offered considerable sums of money for tickets of admission to witness his death.

HOW LONG WILL ENGLAND RETAIN INDIA?

From the N. Y. Herald.

Most of our readers are aware that a sub-marine telegraph cable is now being laid between England and India, touching at Gibraltar. The progress of this enterprise, which is to render Great Britain independent of the Continent of Europe in her intercourse with that country, is being anxiously watched by the British Government, and every means is being employed to hasten the completion of the work.

England is wise in thus preparing for the exigencies of the future. She knows the danger that menaces her in that quarter of the globe; she knows the designs of Russia with regard to Constantinople and her own empire in India, and she is, too, aware of the growing political friendship that subsists between the present Czar and the Emperor Napoleon. In the course of her history she has accomplished great results, but if we are not mistaken, she is destined to suffer equally great losses.

The conquest of India by Clive was an event equally, if not more, extraordinary than the achievements of Pizarro in Peru. Both accomplished their objects with ridiculously insignificant forces, and the results in each case were sufficiently great to influence the destiny of nations.

Instances such as these strikingly demonstrate the moral power which the stronger nature exerts over the weaker: and there can be produced from the whole roll of history no more stirring examples of the superior might of European civilization, and the Anglo-Saxon race, over all others, than these. But second only to other most rank the reconquest of India at the time of the recent mutinies.

It was little less than marvellous that Hindostan, with a native population exceeding two hundred millions, including a vast army of well trained Sepoys, armed and otherwise equipped, whose hatred of the British was of the deadliest kind, and nearly all of whom were roused into open rebellion, should not have crushed the whole of the comparatively few white inhabitants there at the first step in the murderous march of fury and revenge.

It was a hard fought battle, but a glorious triumph for England, when she quelled and rooted the hordes of traitors that were plotting the destruction of the empire she had built up for herself at the expense of dethroned pagods and princes. Nevertheless, that struggle of Nana Sahib and his infernal followers was not marvellous. The native population, ever about their subjugation, but more particularly about the time of the mutinies, had been treated horribly, and with open contempt by the British troops and other residents in India, and, what is worse, their religious prejudices had not been respected. They were ordered to rob or contaminate graves on their surfaces, and it was against the order of the day to wash their graves. Thus the English officers were very unpopular, but they wanted to overcome that prejudice of caste, and they insisted upon the order being carried into execution, and this was the immediate cause of the revolt. Moreover, the [illegible] of some of the army chaplains, and their endeavoring to convert them into Christianity by exposing the "errors" of the one religion and crushing the virtues of the other.

Now, there is nothing in this world that offends a Hindostanee, of whatever caste he may be, more than his superstitions with the religious beliefs. The [illegible] thereby, that himself, the [illegible] results of these combined influences.

The successful issue of the Sepoy attempt to free themselves from the shackles and trample by British sway left Hindostanee depraved was not owned to their lack of physical prowess, but to the want of a proper leader. Nana Sahib was chosen to lead a [illegible] and he will not be unmindful of the intended emancipator of his country, but as a monster of cruelty, deserving only of execration.

The storm, however is still pending, the clouds of insurrection have not disappeared from the sky of Delhi and Cawnpore, and before many years have elapsed the world will, in all human probability, hear of a more dreadful calamity than has yet been known to the chronicles of Oriental warfare. It is morally likely that the catastrophe will be hastened by endeavors to make the Hindoos converts to Christianity, for very strenuous attempts are being made to spread the Gospel in these parts by many influential modes of operations who harangue the most select and unctified of audiences assembled at Exeter Hall and elsewhere.—These men are, of course, ignorant of the mischief they are working; they are unconsciously sowing the storm to reap the whirlwind; yet they esteem themselves, without doubt, the most worthy of philanthropists in thus assisting to enlighten "the heathen" and bring them to a knowledge of the truth as taught by the Church of England.

It is almost inevitable that sooner or later perhaps very soon, Great Britain must loose possession of India entirely and forever.—Many of her most eminent statesmen are of this opinion, and all the circumstances bearing upon the two countries only tend to strengthen it; not the least important of these is the climate of that portion of the Orient, in which the Anglo-Saxon race can never permanently flourish. Notwithstanding, there is no reason why England should hasten her own fall in that distant region by promoting the cause of missionary societies, which can never by any possibility do any good, but will most assuredly work a great deal of harm.

The "Empress of India" as Queen Victoria has officially proclaimed herself, only rules in that country by sufferance, and there is no knowing what an hour or a year may bring forth. The natives of the three provinces of Bengal, Bombay and Madras possess the power to sweep away from these territories the whole fabric of British government in a single day. Therefore it behoves England to act cautiously.

We are influenced by no unworthy, no unkind motives in thus speaking. We should be sorry to see any such disaster occur as that which we have just named; but we forewarn her of the tempest which threatens to wrest from her grasp those Eastern dominions which give her rank in the scale of nations.

It will be well, also, if those who are bent upon Christianizing the Japanese will draw a moral from our remarks.

OUR PROSPECTS.

From all quarters the most gratifying intelligence reaches us as to the approaching harvest, and seldom, if ever has intelligence so uniformly favorable been chronicled.—For once the croakers—those evil genii to be found every where—are at rest—"their occupation's gone."

If there ever was a season calculated to inspire gratitude to the great benefactor, it is the present. The universal testimony from East to West is that crops never looked better, not one or a few kinds, but every sort of produce from the fields, promises a large yield, and accompanying this pleasing announcement, is Canada we have reasonable prospects to expect fair prices for all our surplus. The untoward weather in Great Britain and some parts of Europe, has induced the belief that a deficiency amounting to some millions of bushels of wheat will be experienced, and to the American Continent eyes are turned to supply the demand. With good crops and good prices, we may well feel pleased with ourselves.

Our own neighborhood in particular has been signally blessed, the want of rain experienced in some parts the States and Canada, has not existed here. Our showers have been frequent and timely; sometimes we thought rather heavy; and a bountiful supply of moisture and warm weather have made our fields smile. Never in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant" has the face of the country looked so charming and crops in general appeared so good. The fall wheat has exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine, fields that looked worthless in the spring, and barely escaped being plowed up, look fine and promise a good crop. Another week and the harvest will commence, and with good weather a greater quantity or a better quality of fall wheat, will never have been housed, than in these Counties. Spring wheat and oats look luxuriant and promise a heavy yield, corn, potatoes, turnips, carrots and fruit, are also excellent and equally promising! The hay crop is being secured and will be above an average.

[illegible] of export [illegible] square timber is active good as was expected. There is a dullness in the Quebec Market not at all agreeable, brought about doubtless by the over supply. Wherever this exceeds the demand low prices follow just as sure as effect follows cause. If a fresh portable place should arrise be a glut of timber—for of all our exports it is the most precious—there is but one way of remedy and that out down, will never be required—for our day,—and at the rate we are going on our forest productions will soon be at an end. Of all speculations the lumber ones ought to be consulted for the toil and risk, he shuns himself from the world for three fourths of the year, undergo privations and peril, risks property life and limb, is a profession calling, and it is a matter of sincere regret when he fortune without realizing a fair remuneration for his toil and risk. The [illegible] are going a good deal, and we are glad to learn that prices for [illegible] are improving. Timber [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Advices from Palermo give the names of a new Ministry appointed by Garibaldi.

Madrid, July 6.—Morocco has paid the first instalment on the indemnity to Spain.

FIRE ON SUNDAY MORNING.

TWO CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH.

About a quarter past two o'clock on the morning of Sunday a most disastrous occurrence took place at a fire which broke out on the premises occupied by a coloured man a provision dealer named Henry Barrie, on the Kingston-road, and which resulted in the burning to death of a little boy and girl aged respectively four and six years. The house was situated about half a mile east of the Don, and flames were observed issuing at the time indicated from a kitchen or shed in the rear. When the alarm was first given, Barrie seems to have become very much excited and lost all control over himself, so that for sometime he forgot that his children were in danger of becoming a prey to the devouring element. He suggested to attempt their rescue until they were enveloped in the flames and beyond the reach of human aid to save them from a dreadful death. The Rosedale-street bell early gave the alarm, which was communicated to the engine stations in the centre of the city, and in an incredible short space of time, considering the distant scene of the fire, the Hydes were on the spot. The dwelling, a one-storey frame one, however, was a mass of flame, and there was no water to be had. When the firemen were informed that two children had perished in the flames they could do little, or at least so much of them as were not consumed by the fire. After some little delay a small supply of water was procured, and the interest was redoubled when in a mass of charred and smouldering timber the bodies of the children had been found. Both the children had been terribly burned. A coroner from one of the city wards was brought to bear on the spot, and in a few seconds the remains of the poor children were surrounded by the firemen. The body of the girl was found to be lifeless, portions of the limbs being destroyed by the fire. A short time passed and the coroner carefully lifted and carried into an adjoining house to the keepers, several of whom were readily collected. When the fire was at its zenith, the children were absent, their parents being under the impression that they were with the cousin of a white boy named Cheney, who had been drowned, as an excitement. On being informed that the children were not there, the grief was great. The colored people are highly excited over the occurrence. The colored [illegible]

Agricultural.

WE WANT GOOD BUTTER.

The dairying season is now at full tide, the milk-pails overflow with cream flowing rosiness, the pans are crowned with rich cream, and golden nuggets of butter are ready for transportation to the market, there to be coined into solid coin. The quantity of Dollar brought to the market is immensely surprising a stranger. The quality of much of it is of very inferior grading. An average of 10,000 lbs. of butter per week is consumed in this city and vicinity; 100,000 lbs. would be a full estimate of the of the prime articles to be found in whole quantity. The price paid for the best sorts over the inferior, would seem to be inducement enough to furnish a good article in abundance, but when purchasing family supplies, no hints often accepted, and tasted large lots—smelling was enough in many cases—without doing so, often miserable fellows. However, a change of these things would allow such stuff to appear on their tables; indeed, visitors from this country find the great better knowing of the goods set upon their tables at the hotels. Why, then, is such butter sent here? From some motives, no doubt, because it is poor. A depraved cheating in [illegible] family up, and is "sent to the city" to market for other necessities; the ignorant puppy can plead to all entreaties—that it is the yellow-bad pale, gone tad pack, waxy and greasy, as can be, the better quality is soon corrupted by spit communication, and when opened in market all is changed. My rule If country dealers would fix the price according to the quality, much of this would be rectified. Housekeepers have little encouragement to do their best when a pound of grease fit only for the soap-maker, buys as much sugar as a pound of good table butter.

Dairymen who produce a really superior article are often surprised at the small returns received, from the fastest markets.—Their neighbors count in 2 or 3 cents more per pound obtained for the same quality, and sold by the cargo immediately. Must. There must be a mistake somewhere. The mistake is at the dairyman's door. His neighbor procured new kitchen this spring and has kept them neatly painted, with his name marked in full upon the covers, a grocer or hotel keeper was attracted by the promising look of the package, tried it, found it good, and engaged it for the season—the brand was established, and will always sell well while it keeps its reputation. Our less fortunate friend made the old pail answer, marked it with a knot which he would know, and sent it along. The weather-worn and rusty pail was overlooked by the [illegible] shopkeeper, it was sent with the [illegible] and sold at a reduced price.—Poor [illegible] dairyman. Three cents per pound, on thirty weight of butter, would pay for a new pail every week.

But the great drawback in the quality of our butter is the want of "elbow grease." It is not sufficiently worked. It keeps the dairy apparently sweet and fresh, and is so for the time, but the ladle or roller were sparingly used, the butter-milk and water and [illegible] were not [illegible] to the joints for [illegible] the quality. It would be thought absurd now that indicted a fine of that amount for every pound of poorly worked butter, but the immutable laws of trade do impose just such a fine; no excuses are received, no penalties are remitted, and there is no appeal. But on the other hand, good butter nicely packed and forwarded to honest dealers invariably receives a greeting, which we wish all our dairymen would compete for, and a part of which we will cheerfully pay.—American Agriculturist.

CURRANT WINE.

This article so usually manufactured is rather a cordial than wine and is entirely inferior to the common wine; but when properly made, it is a very superior, healthful beverage, particularly for summer drink when fully diluted with water. Before pressing the juice from the currants, pass them in twos a pair of rollers to crush them after which they must be placed in a strong bag, and they will part with the juice readily with light pressure, such as a common screw, heavy weights, &c. To each quart of juice add three pounds of double refined loaf sugar—single refined sugar is not sufficiently pure—three [illegible] much water as will make one gallon. Suppose the cask intended to be filled is 60 gallons. In this put 30 quarts of currant juice, 90 lbs. of double refined sugar, and fill the cask to the bung with water, roll it over until the sugar is all dissolved. This will be ready by its coming to settle in the barrel. Next day roll it again, and please it in a cellar where the temperature will be more to be even.—Leave the bung loose for the free admission of air. In the course of one or two or three days, fermentation will commence. By placing the car to the bunghole a slight noise will be heard such as may be observed when carbonic acid is escaping from champagne or soda water. Fermentation will continue for a few weeks, converting the sugar into alcohol. As soon as this ceases, drive the bung in tightly, and leave the cask for six months, at the end of which time the wine may be drawn off perfectly clear, whilst any threats of confidence.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

From all quarters we have favorable accounts of the state of crops. Haying is pretty nearly finished in the neighborhood and the crop generally speaking proves excellent. The weather has been favorable for securing it and it has consequently much of it been got in in good condition. The Wheat crop is rapidly advancing to maturity, and although in some quarters complaints are made of the ravage of the midge they are by no means general. In certain parts of Hamford Township, it has indeed been rather destructive, but throughout [illegible] Township the [illegible] of it. The spring [illegible] yesterday; the appointments rains of Friday last having given everything a fresh start. Altogether the prospects of an abundant harvest continue most encouraging.—Perth Star.

AND upwards saved to the Farmer, by Aiden Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 15 to 20 bushels of Chop per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by somewhat cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without changing or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE TURKS.

(From the Liverpool Daily Post.)

For more than three hundred years the Turks were the curse of the West and East. To their origin they borrowed from the Slavonic hatred of the Christian. In fact the Slavonians, and all the enslaved races of Servia and adjoining provinces, have been crushed by the adoption of Mohammedanism—Christians were their opponents, religiously and politically, and hence the hatred of Christians shown in the Massacres up to the present day; it is unrelenting, undying. At any one time Roman Catholic Europe could have driven back or conquered the Turks, but other the first crusade Europe declined to aid in earnest; for most of only the crusade failed. Each petty peninsula considered his own, not the general interest, and the Ottoman was made use of to punish a Christian adversary for the advantage of a Christian priest. The superstition of the Eastern Church debased, and the self-contented Mohammedan conquests; to the luster of several Popes, they sank threatened differences for a noble purpose; but they failed to arouse Europe to a sense of danger or duty, because the Church had lost its proper hold on the minds of men. The Hungarians and the Poles stood on the Northern world from Mohammedanism; and, had they been supported as they ought to have been, Europe would not now be perplexed with the affairs of Turkey.

We ought not to be surprised at the former conduct of European powers, for we witness now the vile policy which led Charles the Second to be the pensioner of Louis Quatorze. Thirty years ago Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and the Christian Alliance stood in diamonds in the streets of Constantinople, yet in 1856 England and France sanctioned 150,000 men and £600,000,000 in order to perpetuate the dominion of the Turks for the benefit of all. We were then told that a Mohammedan was a better ally than a Greek Christian could be, and that the monster Turk had become humane and civilized. Turkey we afford contradictory evidence of the fact. The Turk is to-day what he was three hundred years ago—a bloody paynim—the bitterest enemy of Christians, men, women and children. The days of chivalry are indeed gone, or the Christian peasantry had instantly dispatched a force to Lebanon. A telegram to-day announces the massacre of 1,000 Christians in their place of refuge, and it adds that a crowd of Christian children that fled to a Protestant school had all been brutally killed.

The massacre in all these terrible scenes were treated infinitely worse than the men. They were first violated and then slaughtered. We doubt the French Emperor will win applause by ordering prompt vengeance, and that, in the face of all Europe, for it is loudly demanded—any Christian power undertaking at once to sweep from the earth the whole Turkish race. They are all more entitled to consideration than the tigers in the jungle. The Greek people, as might be expected, are obeying these feelings and sympathies, and are actively encouraging the restoration of the Greek Empire. They cannot be restrained; they ought to be restrained. The policy which interferes for the preservation of Turkey would be a detestable policy.

The Sultan is doing what the Sultans of old always did—destroying ministers and favorites and supporting their property; but the prophecy of his house is being fulfilled—he must quit Europe.

THE FIRST RAILROAD RIDE IN AMERICA.

Major Moncure Alden, the Engineer of the New York and Erie Railroad, at a recent festival, gave the following account of the first trip made by a locomotive on the continent:—"When was it? Who was it? And who overlooked its energies and directed its movements? It was in the year 1826, on the banks of the Lackawaxen, at the commencement of rails-roads; upon which the canal of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company with their coal mines—and he who addresses you was the only person on that locomotive. The circumstances which led to my being above on the engine were these: The road had been built by the company for the conveyance of hemlock timber and rails of large dimensions notched on caps placed for that purpose. The timber had crushed and warped from exposure to the sun. After about 200 or straight line, the road crossed the Lackawaxen creek on trestle work about 20 feet high, with a curve of 300 to 400 feet radius. The road was completed as they ought to have been, Europe would not now be perplexed with the affairs of Turkey.

The road was completed as they ought to have been, which had been brought here at a great expense; but that it was not necessary that more than one should be involved in its fate, that I would take the first ride alone, and the time would come when I should look back to the incident with great interest. As I placed my hand on the throttle valve handle I was undecided whether I would move slowly or with a full degree of speed; but believing that the road would prove safe, and pondering if we did go down, to go luminously, I started with moderate velocity, passed the curve with safety, and was soon out of hearing of the men employed. At the end of the first three miles I reversed the valve and returned without accident, having thus made the first railroad trip by locomotive on the Western hemisphere."

THE CRISIS IN ROME.

"The Portfolio of Government," says the Christian Advocate, "is in the hands of the ultimate prisoners belonging to Romagna, who were confined in the state of Pallanza, Cisle-Cardinal and Antonelli."

The Paris correspondent of the Bryan contains:—

"According to the accounts received from Rome, the Pope is not really in danger. He found it advisable, however, to call on the Swiss Guards to enforce it, for the guidance of the Emperor Napoleon, to constitute a federal states at the head of which would be the Pope, under the protection of the Roman Catholic Powers. Besides the reports to the contrary, the best understanding exists between the Emperor of France, the Pope, Cardinal and General Lamoricière."

GARIBALDI AND NAPOLEON.

The English papers print a letter addressed by Garibaldi to His Excellency Mr. Thomas Farrer, Lord Overstone, in regard to the purchase of Caprera. The letter is dated the 10th of June, and is as follows:—"I have received your letter of the 7th, and I am very sensible of the honor you confer upon me in proposing to purchase Caprera. I am also aware that the Government of Victor Emanuel is very much annoyed at the idea of my residing in Caprera, but I am determined to remain there, and I am sure that the Government will not refuse me the means of living in my own house. I am not a man of intrigue, and I am not a man of ambition. I am a man of the people, and I am a man of the people, and I am a man of the people, and the supporters of Ragged Schools generally against having anything to do with Government grants, which seems more high in office assumed tokens of authority upon them. He told them that if they accepted Government support they must also accept Government Inspection, and then their usefulness shall be at an end.—Evangelist.

SCOTLAND.

The Free Church of Scotland appears to present a parallel in regard to the point of doctrinal sentiment to that of some of the dissenting communities in England.—Mr. John McKeachie, one of its ministers, has lately sent in his resignation to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, on the ground of the positive arminianism or hazy negative Calvinism which has taken the place, in the Free Church, of the doctrines which the Scriptures teach, and which are recorded in the Westminster Confession, and the larger and shorter catechisms, &c.—London Gospel Herald.

IRELAND.

The Revival, as it is called, is still in some places exciting attention. Matters in many places, as regards religion since the excitement has evaporated has not improved. In many place erroneous sentiments have taken root since the "revival" began, and it is a fact that Hymns, &c., have usurped the place of the Scripture Psalms in not a few congregations of Presbyterians, who formerly confined themselves to an inspired Psalmody.—London Reformed Presbyterian.

IMPORTANT FROM ITALY.

St. Johns, N. F., July 27.

The steamship City of Washington, from Liverpool 12th, via Queenstown the 13th inst., passed Cape Race at 6 o'clock this morning.

The news packet of the Associated Press succeeded in obtaining the Cape Race Canister, which contained, however, no summary of news, but two newspapers from which the following summary of European intelligence is compiled:—

The British Government is said to have received intelligence of a fearful massacre of Christians at Damascus. Five hundred were killed, amongst whom was the Dutch Consul.

The American Consul not wounded.

The two vessels which placed troop to Garibaldi are merchant steamers. It is confirmed that the steamer Veloce was passed over to Garibaldi.

Naples, July 14th.—Patriots are constantly compelling the struggle.

The telegraphic reply of Lord Palmerston concerning the stabbing of an Inspector of the former police on the 12th, in the Strada de Toledo.

A proclamation of Garibaldi against the Bourbon dynasty has been distributed.

He says, "I am a Republican, but prefer Victor Emmanuel, who will lead us against Austria."

Naples, (via Turin) 17th.—There has been a conflict between the troops and the people in consequence of popular manifestations in favor of some refugees who had disembarked at Naples. Several persons were killed.

THE WAR WITH CHINA

Quebec, July 20th.

The Admiralty ordered here this morning—a mail left Liverpool on the 13th, and Londonderry at midnight, on the 12th. On the 14th July, the exchanged signals with the homeward bound; off Cape of Ireland on the 15th at 6, p. m., the exchanged signals with the steamship Nova Scotian off Point de Monts.

The "Bohemian" experienced a continuation of westerly winds throughout her passage.

An interruption of the working of the line prevented the transmission of the news yesterday.

ENGLAND.

The royal mail steamship Asia, from New York, arrived at Liverpool at 5, p. m., on the 13th.

The Illinois and Saxonia were to leave Southampton on the 16th for New York.

In the House of Lords on the 16th, Earl Granville stated his belief that the disturbances in New Zealand had been greatly exaggerated.

A debate took place on the Savoy question, and the policy of England taking part in the proposed Conference, in the course of which the annexation of Savoy to France was very generally deprecated.

In the House of Commons Mr. Roebuck attacked the Government for prosecuting an unjust war with China, and encouraging the opium trade.

Mr. Gladstone replied, denying that the war was unjust, and asserting that the treaty of Tien Sin was as binding on engagement as could be made, and that its ratification was most important. He also stated that the financial position of the country required to levy an immediate duty of 1s 11d per gallon on ardent spirits. This was agreed to.

FRANCE.

The news from France is unimportant.

The Moniteur announces that a project of law for the purchase of the Canal had been adopted.

NAPLES AND SICILY.

Conspiracy exclaims are reported to have taken place since Monday between the Mole-point, under Cpt. Bosco, and the advance guard of the Modena troops.

The British Admiral, Mundy, had quitted Palermo for England and there were currently but few British vessels in the roads.

DREADFUL MASSACRE IN SYRIA.

ENGLAND.

In the House of Lords on the 17th, Lord Brougham called attention to the case of a negro lady who was recently refused a first class passage in a Cunard steamer, on the ground of color. He said he had no doubt but that damages could have been recovered if the matter had not been compromised.

Lord Wodehouse confirmed the news that 500 Christians had been massacred in Damascus, and that the Cleopatra Steamer, with the exception of the Britons, had been burned.

FRANCE.

Paris 19.—The Moniteur says the Sultan addressed the following letter to the Emperor on the 16th July:

I have at heart that your Majesty should know with what grief I have learned the events in Syria. Let your Majesty be convinced that I shall employ all my powers for establishing security and order in Syria—that I shall severely punish the guilty parties, whoever they may be, and render justice to all. In order to leave no doubt whatever of the intentions of my government, I have entrusted that important mission to my Minister of Foreign Affairs, with whose principles your Majesty is acquainted.

The news from France is unimportant.

NAPLES AND SICILY.

The second Neapolitan plenipotentiary to Sardinia, had reached Turin. A Neapolitan Minister had also reached Paris.

A new Sicilian ministry had been formed.

A Naples Telegram says a strong and compact ministry would be immediately formed to carry out to their full extent, the principles of the Constitution and Government, and to watch over the interests of the nation.

The latest news from Naples reports the dismissal of the Ministry; Commander D. Martino only would remain in the new Cabinet.

SYRIA.

The massacre of the Christians in Syria are said to reach from 7,500 to 8,000 persons, while 151 villages have been destroyed.

The ship Equestrian, of Boston, has been wrecked near Beyrout.

Beyrout, July 11th.—The attack of the Druses on the Christians at Damascus continued on the evening of the 9th. Several men were killed and many women carried off.

The French, Russian and Greek consuls took refuge in the House of Abd Kader. The attitude of the Turkish authorities was inducive and rather injurious than useful to the Christians.

Three thousand Turkish soldiers arrived to-day. The forts up the Chebellia are reoccupied, and Commissioners Derby and Norwuth are expected with impatience.

Details to the first of July say it was then ascertained that the Druses had burned and pillaged 101 villages since the 29th of May, while from 7,500 to 8,000 Christians, inhabitants of Lebanon, many of whom were wealthy men, and all strangers to anything like poverty, are homeless beggars, depending on charity for their daily bread. Over and above the number of Christians shot in actual warfare, it is believed 7,000 or 8,000 have been butchered in cold blood.

The massacres at Damascus was not known at this date. The most sickening details are given of the barbarity inflicted on all ages and sexes.

A French vessel had been sent to Latakia, and was obliged to take up a position within firing distance of the town, in order to restrain the fanatical portion of the inhabitants from committing further outrages.

The Austrian frigate Radisky had been ordered to proceed to Syria, to co-operate with vessels of other powers.

Great agitation prevails at Aleppo and Kilis City.

ITALY.

Great military camps are to be formed by the end of August, in the neighborhood of Turin, Alexandria, Milan, Florence, and Bologna. The Minister of War at Turin had issued a notification informing all rest retired officers of the army that the necessity of calling them again to active service has ceased.

The demand for money continues engrossed the applications at the Banks were numerous, although not so pressing as they have been.

Additional failures in the leather trade continue to take place in the provinces. The total failures are estimated at three millions of pounds sterling.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

A private letter has been received in anticipation of the mail, the date of which is believed to be Hong Kong 7th, which states the shipment of Tea to be £1,000,000 since the departure of the previous mail.

The Ellen Rogers had sailed with some new tea on board, and some 30,000 chests had arrived at the port.

Another telegram says that the exports of tea show an increase.

The exports of silk were 6,700 bales.

Trade at Shanghai suspended, and the rebels are investing Sunchow.

As regards the war with England and France, it is added that the Chinese are resolved to fight.

London, July 15.—It is reported in Paris that the French Government had received a communication from Petersburgh, expressing the desire of Russia to act in accord with France and England in the East.

The Russian Cabinet reiterated its opinion that the recent events, now transpiring in the East, hold in suspense the peace of the world, and that the very existence of Turkey is at stake.

THE HARVEST.

The harvest operations throughout Upper Canada may now be said to have fairly begun, and never was there a better chance that is [illegible] ripening grain, fruit and garden produce, all look disheartening and cheering for the husbandman, who can rejoice at the prospect of a golden reward for his toil. It may now be surmised without fear, that better times are shining on the distant horizon, and that years of prosperity are still before our people.

In several townships new wheat has been brought to the mill, and we expect every day to see new flour brought into the market. The harvest of 1860 is a glorious season.

The substance of our gleanings from American exchanges on the harvest, may be thus given :—

The Rural New Yorker, of July 21, says:—The wheat harvest is nearly complete in this section. The grain has generally been secured in good condition, and the yield and quality so far as we can learn are fully equal to the anticipation of growers. The main crop of this region was not affected by the midge.

Ohio.—Wheat, equal in quantity and quality to last year, has been secured in good order. Oats fair and corn promising well. The grain crop of 1859 was about 186,000,000 bushels and will be more this year; 25,000,000 being wheat, over about the same, and the balance chiefly in corn.

Indiana.—Wheat and corn crops both unusually large—the former well secured and the latter growing finely.

Illinois.—Wheat all secured and most of it marketed. The average yield is large and the quality excellent. The spring report will be greater than any previous year. One dealer is said to have paid in Springfield for his wheat, and contracts for further delivery [illegible]

Wisconsin.—[illegible] thing was favorable for an immense and unprecedented crop of wheat in this State. Harvest has commenced, and in ten days or two weeks from the 20th will be secured.

Iowa.—[illegible] from Wisconsin, and all crops are looking well. In Southern Iowa, harvest is over.

Minnesota.—This forms no exception to the other States of the northwest. The wheat harvest is pretty much established, and there will be a large surplus for exportation, the very first [illegible]

Kansas.—The wheat is not very heavy, but which is [illegible]

From Missouri, we do not hear anything. Pennsylvania and New York will yield well, and the crop of wheat in Canada is fair though [illegible] together, and there is not much in it to induce any [illegible] to come.

California Wheat.—All the California papers speak of the wheat harvest [illegible] in that State as very promising, and likely to afford a large surplus for shipment. Indeed it is estimated that the shipments [illegible] and June, [illegible] will foot up 200,000 bags. [illegible] competing in Liverpool with the products of Illinois and other great wheat States at the West. Sending flour from here to the Pacific after this will verify the old saying "sending coal to Newcastle." On the 15th of July, there were [illegible] of San Francisco with [illegible] Honolulu Times.

TO MAKE STEERS HOLD UP THEIR HEADS.

Having seen in a former number of the Rural an inquiry from "O. W. T." how to make steers hold up their heads while at work, I will give you my experience and observation on the subject. In the first place, [illegible] the right breed to [illegible] the [illegible] stock, while they are at work that their heads up. Secondly, do not tire them, as it worries and causes them to droop their heads.—Thirdly, when it is desired to stop the steers, make them understand the word when I speak quick and distinct, and when they are stopped turn the but of the whip end up then under their jaws lightly, until they bring their heads to the proper place.—Rural American.

CANADA THISTLES.

I have seen several inquiries for a way to kill Canada thistles, and several methods recommended, and as none agree with my plan, I thought I would send you one.—Cut with a sharp axe the when the stalk is hollow, which is when in blossom, and during very heavy rains. If done in fair weather, the stalks will close, and the cutting will not kill unless the stalk become filled with water, which will kill the root and branch. As the stalks are not all hollow at the same time, it must be repeated. Three years, well managed, will make a finish of them. I have had more than 60 years' experience and have not had it fail.—S. S. Sartwell, Camden, May, 1860.

We commend the above to the attention of [illegible] who [illegible] are well acquainted with this troublesome weed.

A new Steamboat [illegible] monthly mail [illegible] Lake [illegible] every week into a slump in the city the other day, and exclaimed "Why is the way to the Mississippi?" "They stuck Georgia next year was the answer.

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and irregulars but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 10 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without changing or adjusting the Machine.

All orders directed to "H. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the first Merchants of both Provinces) become a great favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the business, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

For the Examiner.

MAN IS MAN'S BROTHER.

BY SAMUEL P. FORD.

Man have claims upon each other
Which no law can set aside.
Man degraded is the brother
Of the man of rank and pride.

And no senatorial fiat,
King's decree or monarch's nod,
Can reverse it or deny it,
Verdict of the living God.

Offspring of a common parent,
Suppliant at a common bar,
Are not signs like these declarant—
Of fraternal bondhood there?

Shall we then act so unkindly,
To that fallen erring one?
Have we never acted blindly,
Or done wrong in weakness done?

Fallen though he be, yet is he
Not our spirit's brother still?
Should not heart and hand be busy
How to rescue him from ill?

Know ye not that words of meekness,
Often heal the painful smart,
Which some action done in weakness
Hath inflicted on the heart?

Oft when the soul hath quivered,
In the grasp of error's chain—
Words of love the links have severed,
Set the spirit free again.

Shall we then refuse assistance
To the fallen and the tried,
Coolly pass them at a distance
For the paltry cause of pride.

When the only needed token
Of our friendship they demand—
Is a word in kindness spoken,
Or the grasping of a hand?

Are we righteously exempted,
From asserting all our power,
To relieve the weak and tempted
In the dark and trying hour?

Nay, we are commanded rather,
By Jehovah's code of laws,
Round the tempted one to gather,
Shield him from the tempter's claws.

Shall we then behold our fellows,
Dropping to a drunkard's grave,
Wreck'd upon rum's fiery billows,
And make no attempt to save?

Brothers, though we may have pandered
To the tyrant in the part—
Let us rally round our standard
And defend it to the last.

And the God of battles grant us
That the tyrant may be baffled
Beltward, and no more supplant us—
In possession of the world.

Peterborough, 1860.

A Black Man's Story.

A case has recently come to our knowledge, which affords an unusual, though not an unfair illustration of the system of American slavery.

A man named Edward Backus, now sixty-three years of age, was born in Hardy county, in the great State which has the double honor of being the "Mother of Presidents" and the mother of slaves. He was the son of a native African woman who was kidnapped on the coast of Africa and brought to this country in a slave-ship.—The child, before he was five years old, was sold three times—twice with his mother, and the third time away from her.

At this third purchase, the price of his body was paid in specie which was counted out upon the grass, under a green tree. The money was afterwards spent to buy a tract of land in Ross county, Ohio, on the "Big Bottoms" of the Scioto river. "Since I have been free" says the venerable man, "I have lived in Ohio, and have walked many a time over the very piece of ground. Last year it was covered with corn; a great field of four hundred and eighty acres without a single cross-fence to divide it!—But," he added, "no ear of all the crop fell to my share!"

The incident strikingly illustrates how much faster, during the last fifty years, land in Ohio has risen in value, than slaves in Virginia!

At the age of eight, the black boy, then a little piece of marketable merchandize, was fatally damaged against ever afterwards bringing a high price in the market, by an unfortunate cut from his master's which struck out a blow on the child's eyes! What made the matter worse, the provocation was scarcely sufficient to be alleged as an apology by the aristocratic and elegant Virginia planter, whose undertoned strokes thus cost him well nigh three hundred dollars. The offence was only this; a cow had broken through her pen; the boy was ordered to drive her back; the master's dog undertook to assist the boy by leading the cow by the ear; the bite drew blood; the boy was charged with having incited the dog to mischief; his denial was taken as a lie; the whip-lash was raised, and one eyeball fell upon the child's cheek!

He was now valueless to his sold, yet valuable to the kept. He grew up to a maimed manhood, on this same plantation. He never afterwards experienced any single act of cruelty equal to this early blow, but on new days of his general treatment looking back upon his life, "Every day was crowded with hard work; I had a strong constitution, but heavy burdens broke it down; I wanted to learn to read, but was forbidden; I wanted to be a man, but was kept a child."

In middle life, he married; three of his children are dead, three living; two are free in Ohio, one a slave in Virginia. The wife was owned by a neighboring planter, where he visited her once in a month, sometimes once a week. He was industrious and provident, and contrived, by means of extra earnings, to accumulate about seven hundred dollars. The money thus gathered was deposited by the hands of a white man in the neighborhood, in whom Backus knew that he could trust himself.

After many years of married life, with the view of the price of being sold to a Georgia trader. The act was regarded as unwarrantable by some of the neighbors, who protested against such a rendering even of a slave family. The owner, under pretext of humanely revoking his bargain, offered her for sale to her husband for four hundred dollars. Of course, he little expected that a plantation slave was the possessor of so much money. Few persons know that the negro had, at that moment, in a trusty man's hands, the needed sum to buy and save his wife. He accepted the offer on the spot, sent for his white friend paid the money, and received a bill of sale—to the great surprise of trader, owner and spectators!

But after the purchase, when the seller reflected that by having sold her to Georgia he could have realized a higher price, he attempted to annul the sale. On what pretext! The statutes of Virginia furnished a pretext! A plea was put in that a slave could not legally buy a slave; that property could not possess property; that a chattel could not own a chattel!

To avoid this difficulty, the Blackman, deposited the bill of sale in the hands of the white man to whom he had formerly trusted his money. It was held in this manner for eight years, after which the holder suddenly died. Almost at the same time, the slave enfeebled in health and useless for work, was turned loose from the plantation, (like a worn-out horse into the common), with the free papers in his hands, commanding him to exile himself from the State of Virginia, and from his wife and children, within twelve months! The trustees of the deceased man's estate meantime found among his documents the bill of sale. They immediately seized the paper, and with it attempted to seize the woman. The husband being at this moment providentially free, was competent to try the case in the courts. The judge, who had long known the man and wife from personal acquaintance, declared in open court that he would sooner cut off his hand than award the woman to his estate. The trustees, finding that the decision would go against them, resorted to the petty dishonesty of applying personally to the husband, with a proposition that he should pay three hundred dollars as a compromise to settle a suit that the court had already settled! This sum, though it took the last cent out of his pocket, he blindly paid. He immediately took his wife, and two of his daughters, from Virginia into Ohio. Another daughter, now a young woman of twenty years, was behind in bondage, where she still remains.

The old man is now the owner of himself and of the largest part of his family. Kind friends may yet assist him in reclaiming the remaining child. He resides in a little house near the seat of one of our Western colleges, and earns a livelihood by cultivating a garden, and by sometimes driving a team in the service of the professors and students.

Such is the story of one slave's life for sixty years! But how many such unwritten histories will arise in judgement before God against a free nation, in which sixteen States like the mystic Babylon of the Revelation, are still making merchandize of slaves and souls of men!—Independent.

A FEW DAYS AT KILLARNEY.

From the London Saturday Review.

The sun sends forth against the earth the same quantity of heat year after year. The total amount of heat is invariable, and hence it any portion of the earth's surface during any given year be cooler than ordinary, we may infer with certainty that some other portion of its surface is then warmer than ordinary. The port of Odessa owes its importance to a case of atmospheric compensation of this kind. Forty or fifty years ago, Western Europe received less than its normal amount of heat; the burning sunbeams fell upon the East, and Odessa became, to some extent, the granary from which the hungry West was fed. The atmosphere is the grand distributor of heat. It has its cold and warm currents—vast aerial rivers, which chill or cheer according to the proximate sources from which they are derived. In this present year, the British Isles appear to be near the common boundary of two such currents—the limit, however, shifting so as to cause both to pass over us in quick succession. Near this boundary line the atmospheric current mingle, and the copious aqueous precipitation which we now observe is the result.

Superadded to this source of general rain, we have at Killarney local condensers in the neighboring mountains. Round the cool crest of Carrantual and its peaked and craggy brothers the moist southwest wind curdles ceaselessly into clouds, which mourn and moan and heather, from whose decomposition is derived the peat, which, like the skin of the pachyderm, clothes the disintegrated rock. Grandly the vast cumuli build themselves in the atmosphere, hanging at times heavily over the mountains and awaiting with their gestation the known signs of the hills. Reddened by the evening sun, these clouds cast their hue upon the lakes, the crisped surface of which breaks up their images and thrust opposite of different colours—light—which, altering with the hue of the sky, also cast upon the water, sometimes produce a marvellous effect. On other days, the Cumuli send whipped into rags and scattered through the gorges of air, hiding the crests as the smoke of a battle hides for with the spectators' atmosphere. Day by day the guides prophesy fine weather—the blackest cloud is "all for him." You are assured that if you start to-day you will not get "a single shower" of misty rain to, and live drenched; but the guide is prepared to encounter rain, and one of unconquerable being added to his private store.

[illegible] the clouds of this season seem to have descended in unusual abundance, upon the lakes, more than their proper share, as some. And as friends depend, they send here under. In addition to the showers which fall, there is a constant precipitation of moisture from the trees, which, in the absence of wind, are never dry. From the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] communicates with the Middle Lake, and the suddenness with which this lovely sheet of water opens before one on quitting the Long Range, constitutes perhaps the greatest surprise which the traveller here encounters. We walked along the rides of the Purple Mountain ankle deep in elastic moss, and commanding glorious views at either side. Arrived at the end of its greatest span, the Middle and Lower Lakes with their islands, and the wooded and fortress peninsula which lies between them, lay before us. No view of the English lakes which it has fallen to our lot to enjoy, could compare it loosely with that now at our feet. We passed onward through the heather to the brow above the boy of Glena, and there clambered down the mountain, clipping our spires by the trees, which grew out of the guarled roots the moss and [illegible] crags. At Glena we met our boat, and gave [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] the absence of bobbing guides kept a watch on this occasion, indeed, the appearance of the mountains will always willingly [illegible] with them wherever he goes. The main guidance of his fellow travellers that delivery of Nature, and prevents you from delivering yourself blindly up to them. [illegible] guide is not merry guide and companion. As an old friend [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE IRISH BRIGADE IN ROME!

The Nation publishes a letter from Rome, giving a full and authentic account of the affray which took place in the Eternal City on the 27th of June between the Papal troops and a portion of the Irish Brigade, enlisted for the purpose of maintaining the Pope's authority against all his enemies. Subjoined is the more material portion of the Nation's version of the royal row:

"We had a row on Wednesday evening, which has been the great topic in Rome during the last two days. A young man named Lefler, very respectable, and nicely educated, but with not very much discretion not being satisfied with the position of 'fair private' (being like a number of those who seem to have expected officers' commissions to be as plentiful as herrings), put off his uniform and turned out in plain clothes.—The roll was to be called, Mr. Hawley, ordered him to put on his uniform. He refused. Lieut. Hawley ordered him to be arrested, and called on a sergeant named Wiseman to arrest him. The latter, who was close by, and seems to have had some partiality for Lefler, instead of obeying the order, bullied some men at hand to assist in resisting its execution. Others of the battalion, however, went properly, with alacrity turned out to arrest the insubordinates. These ran off and took refuge in the Irish College. Some French officers, not aware of the rights of refuge, wanted to enter and arrest the men. The college authorities refused to permit this, and the time, referred them to representations, &c., allowed the temper of all the parties to cool, and Lefler and Wiseman heartily to repent of their conduct as an offence not merely against military discipline, but against the credit of their native country. So they one and all gave themselves up quietly that evening. Meanwhile the barracks where the battalion of St. Patrick is stationed was the scene of the greatest tumult, on hearing that some of the men had acted in such a manner as I have described—some saying this, some saying that—some furiously calling for prompt chastisement on those few who had, as they asserted, brought disgrace on the brigade and on Ireland, and given a handle to their enemies; others on the other hand, palliating the conduct of the malcontents, and censuring the great strictness of drill and discipline ordered by General Lamoriciere. The crowded in groups, excitedly discussing the whole affair, the crowd being swelled by Swiss and French idlers, all waiting to see the upshot of affairs; and at the cross roads, as well as at the Piazza Aldobrandini, there were crowds of Romans looking on in amazement at what all the noise was about. By the mere removal of some of the battalion began to arrive on the spot from various parts of the city, and they instantly ordered the men back to their barracks. The men obeyed grumblingly, as the curiosity of all was greatly excited, and they wanted to learn the result of the affair. By a singular and most fortunate chance that very evening, by the train from Civita Vecchia, who should arrive but the Major of the Irish Battalion —Mr. Miles W. O'Reilly, of Knockaboley Castle. He barely reached the hotel from the terminus when he heard of what was going on, and off he hurried to the barracks. He came up at the moment while the Irish were all gathered together outside the barracks, about to enter it. His instantly ordered the men to fall in, and put them through their drill, and made them a brief and beautiful address. You never saw any change so sudden and complete. The men became as contented and docile as possible, and everything wore a most cheering appearance, when a deplorable incident changed the aspect of affairs. At the end of the the file next the barracks captain there was a most terrible Irishman. I forget to tell you there is one division of Belgians and Romans in the same barrack as our men. The Belgian officer is to command had, at the very first outbreak of the row, drawn up his men under arms in front of the barracks. This gave great offence to Irish, who felt indignant at being, as they thought, guarded over by Belgians, and the man I have alluded to kept raging with bitter excitement to his comrades, 'Look at those fellows; they would sell the Pope, and join Garibaldi in the morning, and look at them with their bayonets like ostriches to terrify us.' The thing seemed to sting bitterly, and the moment Major O'Reilly gave the order to right-about-face, this private passionately dashed at the convoy of the Belgians or Romans, and with one blow of his first between the eyes laid the poor fellow sprawling and kicking in the dust, to the utter amazement and horror of every one. The Belgian officer, with odd lack of discretion, instantly gave the words 'Prime and load—make ready—present—fire!' O'Reilly rushed forward, and putting himself between the muzzles of the guns and the position of the Irish, in a voice of thunder countermanded the rash and terrible order. It was a moment of painful excitement. At O'Reilly's voice of thunder—though, having so recently arrived, he was personally unknown—the Belgians held the levelled guns, yet pulled no trigger. Then O'Reilly ordered his men once more into line; but by this time out poured every Irishman in the barracks, and a strange scene ensued. Though utterly unarmed they rushed at the armed Belgians, and a regular hand-to-hand conflict ensued —the Irish, however, merely desiring to disarm the others—wresting away the guns, twisting the bayonets off the twigs, and tossing them in the air by dozens. The Belgian officer drew his sword and made a stroke at an Irishman, which, however, wounded him but very slightly. This was the first actual blow struck. On this another Irishman flung a stone at the officer, which stunned him, but hit one of his men. Thus, notwithstanding the serious nature of the whole affair, proved to be the only blows given throughout. O'Reilly tact, energy, and presence of mind was above all praise. He soon, assisted by his officers, succeeded in bringing the men to their obedience, and in a few minutes had order once more restored, and by nine o'clock everything was as orderly as if nothing had occurred. Upon all this I must make one observation. One of the evils always and inevitably attendant on volunteering is here seen. Men seem to imagine that because the volunteer they must in a manner be their own masters, and debate, and cabinet, and criticise, instead of obeying, discipline. The Irish have display this unlucky spirit. They underrate all others, and imagine that they must be treated in a special manner. In a special manner, no doubt, they will eventually be treated, in so far as to be deemed the 'scum' brigade of Italy; for already the spiteful eye of Lamoriciere has marked them out for that. But at present their quarrel continued is speedily stopped, and [illegible] Lamoriciere sees that [illegible] to be the best soldiers in the [illegible] service, hence the tacit [illegible] of the officers, who, aware of [illegible] Lamoriciere's [illegible] [French soldiers] [illegible] the traits of character [illegible] seeing the [illegible] Commander-in-Chief looks on the Irish Brigade as a mere would as a young [illegible] of incomparable mettle and bottom, needing, however, great trouble to break in, but if once broke in, worth a score of ordinary stuff. Of 1500 Irish here, only 40 have been rejected on presenting themselves for enrolment. Some scores from Youghal evidently acted £14 beauty, and £4 a day. Of course they were spurned. Some 20 from Limerick seem to have come out in the same mercenary scheme. These, in all about 30, are the only mercenaries that have reached this country from Ireland."

FORTY DEATHS AT ST. LOUIS FROM EXCESSIVE HEAT.

From the St. Louis Democrat of Saturday.

Consequent upon the overpowering heat of yesterday—the mercury rising to 102, 104, and 106 degrees in the shade—the Coroner last evening received nearly a score of calls to hold inquests upon persons suddenly and fatally exhausted from the oppressive heat.

(From the St. Louis Democrat of Monday.)

The extreme heat of the latter half of last week, especially of Friday and Saturday, resulted in an increase of seventy-four deaths over those of the preceding week. Yet the heavy number of the deaths Friday night and Saturday do not appear in the mortuary bill for the week, as they were the number of interments only, but will be enumerated in the list for the present week. Friday, the report shows but eight deaths from "sun stroke," or heat exhaustion, whereas the Coroner calls us of three times that number. The actual increase of deaths last week over those of the week preceding, cannot be less than ninety, and by the next report will probably be shown to have been more than one hundred.

Of the two hundred and seventeen persons reported as deceased and interred last week, one hundred and twenty-eight—or twenty more than half of the whole number—were children under five years of age. One hundred and thirty-four were white males, and eighty-three white females.

From another article, Monday.

In addition to the eleven instances of fatal sun stroke recorded in our columns last Saturday, the mortuary report exhibits eight more as having previously occurred during the week—only two or three of which had been chronicled by the local press. To these nineteen cases we have now to add many more.

Here follows a list of deaths from the heat, with attendant circumstances, filling a full column of the Democrat. We give the names of the dead:—Mary Brannon, Wm. Jones, Richard Fryer, Ann Boyle, James Boyle, James Andrew, Timothy Dillahan, Ellen Riley, Mrs. Mary Egan, Catherine Forwaine, Mrs. Jane Gery, Mary Kelly, an unknown man, Margaret Smith, Mary Stevens, Mrs. Mary McHale, Jos. Saunders, Mrs. Dora Byrne, Michael Bimen, Cornelius Benton, Peter Gallaher, (prize fighter) Timothy Jones, John Keogh, an unknown woman, Bartholomew Regan, an unknown woman, James Curley, Captain Daniel Byrne, Jos. Rotzel, Louis Hypolite, Barbara Kahn, a stranger, Mrs. Fraser, an unknown man, John Jennings, a butcher, Mary A. McDonald, Ann Smith, three persons unknown, of Saratoga, N. Y.

The manner in which the victims were affected is paragraphed in the following style. Comparatively few cases of sun stroke are mentioned. The deaths were mostly caused by sheer exhaustion:

At 1 p. m. a stranger called at the thoroughfare house of Francis Timins, No. 32 South Levee, and asked to be shown to a bed.—He was accommodated [illegible] and the chief of the [illegible] for several hours, when he was found to have died.

Ellen Riley, a hearty girl, worked hard at scrubbing a floor, became suddenly insensible and soon died.

Ann Smith worked hard at washing and ironing on Thursday, was unwell yesterday morning, at 3 p. m. became overpowered by exhaustion through heat, and died within an hour.

At 1 p. m. a man fell and expired in an alley, between Carr and Biddle and Eighth and Ninth streets.

Michael Shaer, retired apparently in usual health Thursday night, and was yesterday morning found dead in bed. Died of heat exhaustion.

John Roach came in excessively exhausted, lay down upon the floor, and in a few minutes expired.

An unknown man called at No. 8 Cherry street, begged leave to sit on a bench, and soon fell to the floor and died.

Ann Boyle, a cook at the Delevan House, performed her usual task up to about half past two p. m. on Saturday, when she suddenly fainted, and in a few minutes was a corpse.

EUROPE WANTS FOOD.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

With no small anxiety do we read the foreign newspapers, to ascertain what may be the prospects of the harvest abroad.—The result of our investigation is as follows:—

In England, Ireland, and Scotland bad weather continued up to the end of July.—The wet and cold had nearly destroyed all the summer fruits. France and Italy were in the same disastrous state. In Germany, on the 27th June, the fine weather which had there prevailed for a few days, was broken by violent torrents of rain and hail. In Spain and Portugal the complaint is the same. Russia had suffered very little, and the steppes of Poland and the vast plains of the Ukraine will probably supply a good deal of wheat. From Hamburg, the port for the produce watered by the Elbe nearly only any grain is to be expected. As we have already stated, the main supply (as of Indian corn, which is little used in Europe, but) of wheat, rye, barley and oats on which Europe will mainly depend for the next twelve months, will chiefly come from the United States. This is the golden time for American agriculture. Our farmers ought to make much money this year, and they deserve it all, for they labor with a will.

Nor is it from the cereal productions of the soil alone that American farmers may expect to make large profits. The scarcity of fodder in Europe has made cattle unsaleable and dear. Great discontent prevails among the working classes of England on account of the dearness of fresh meat. It is not to be wondered at. The prices run thus [illegible] Prime beef, fifty per pound; rough rump steak beef, 50; inferior beef for cooking soup, boiling, &c.; ordinary joints of veal and lamb, fifty the pound.—Now, American beef and pork can be put in England and France for prices very much less than these; and already the English papers are encouraging the farmers to send their produce to the best markets. [illegible] Europe is in the [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] stately for this man of law, he says that his character is announced, it cannot be injured or impaired by such sins, and as for Mr. Heathcote's censure, it is preferable to his praise. Query—How can Mr. Heathcote, under these circumstances, injure the character of Mr. White?

Mr. Heathcote is a good mark, however, and having passed the "limit of abuse," he must suffer the consequence. If a verdict is rendered against him he can be made foot the bill. Mr. White has often placed that "limit," but the parties having cause for action were not so sure of costs being paid; hence his exemption from trial for libel.

Yours, &c.,
MERTON.

LA QUESTION IRLANDAISE, OR THE IRISH QUESTION.

The following, from the Cork Reporter a Roman Catholic journal, is worthy the perusal of Roman Catholics in this country, who foolishly rail against the British Government on all occasions, denouncing it as oppressive, tyrannical, &c. Hear what their sensible fellow-countryman and co-religionist says:—

"If we were asked what we regarded as the worst affront that could be offered to our country at the present moment we would say the insulting compassion of one of those wretched scribblers who does the dirty work of French Imperialism. If we had sunk so low as to need such compassion, we would deserve extinction as a race. The Napoleonic system is not merely a despotism, but a despotism which relies for its strength on the profanation of those securities by which it was fondly hoped that freedom could be best maintained. Its agents and apologists are not content with injuring the cause of liberty by all the means to which they can resort, but they make it the theme of their daily jibes and mockery. If the people of France choose to endure this, we cannot help them. It is their affair, not ours. But we may surely ask, how have we come to earn the insulting pity of such a race? There is but one answer—want of self-respect. We have falsified everything respecting our own position, proclaimed ourselves to suffer under wrongs and outrages which we do no endure, to bring odium on a power which we falsely accuse of inflicting them.

When this French scribbler, to throw discredit on a nation that in the full fruition of its freedom affords so noble a contrast to the gilded servitude of his own, proclaims the evils under which Ireland groans, he but repeats the lies of Irishmen. He has in all likelihood, an excuse which they have not—the excuse of ignorance. History truly tells him of a period in which British rule in this country was a galling yoke. He takes up newspapers of the present time, and they represent the existing state of things as nothing better than that which then unfortunately prevailed. Such representations suit his purpose, and though he may have his doubts, and more than doubts, as to their truth, he is not responsible for their falsehood. The circulation of the slander suits the purpose of his Imperial master—why shall he hesitate to circulate it? Why shall he not expose the grievances of the islanders on whom Great Britain still ruthlessly tramples, outraging their nationality, and persecuting their creed? A French pamphlet makes—as the tricolor once did—the tour of Europe. If it can be made the medium for circulating a useful Irish lie, the temptation to those to whom the lie is useful is tolerably strong. And "La Question Irelandaise" issues from the Parisian press, to shame England with the civilized world, by a trumped up tale of Irish suffering. But are Irishmen who love their country or respect themselves, to tolerate in silence, the circulation of such untruths? Are they to be represented falsely to all mankind as lamely enduring a misgovernment which, if it existed, they would be bound by every principle of honor, every impulse of patriotism and manhood, to revolt against? Is Europe to be informed by a French scribbler, at the bidding or with the connivance of, the most insidious of European despots, that Ireland is held ignominiously in the thrall by England? If the fact were so, on whom would rest the disgrace? On the oppressed not the oppressor. It is not possible to offer Irishmen a greater insult than that of telling them that they are suffering and silent slaves; and if anything were required to heighten the affront, it is that a Frenchman should be the man to offer it."

Agricultural.

THE BENEFITS OF DRAINING.

Clearing farmers, we are happy to find, are beginning to wake up to the conscientiousness that it is time to give up trusting entirely to the virgin freshness of the soil, and that to hold their own with the rest of the community, they must begin to adopt those improvements in agriculture which, in the old country, have not only ceased to be matters of experiments, but have come to be looked upon as of primary importance. First among them is the system of underdraining, without which no farm can be regarded as more than half redeemed from its native wildness, and which in England and other parts of the Empire, has already been almost universally adopted. The benefits to be derived from this practice have been so often dictated in these columns, that we shall spend no time now in arguing the question, but, what is more to the purpose, shall proceed to lay before our readers a few facts in relation to the subject which have lately come under our notice.

We were shown yesterday by Mr. Ross, a well known agriculturist, residing in the township of York, a sample of wheat grown by him on one of his fields which, last fall, underwent the process of draining, and certainly, if we may judge of the value of the experiment by its results, no more satisfactory proof could be desired. The field was one of eleven acres, a stiff clay, and lying low. Last summer it was fallowed, and drained with two inch tiles, each drain being 25 yards asunder. The work, including the tiles, cost 37½d per rod, the expense of the whole being about $125. From the situation of the field and the quality of its soil it has hitherto never produced more than twelve and a half bushels to the acre which at a dollar a bushel would be worth about $130. This year the yield will not be less than thirty bushels to the acre, realising at the same rate $330, the difference paying for the cost of the draining and leaving a margin of $50 besides! Pretty well for one year's work.

It is not merely by producing a fine crop under ordinary circumstances that tile draining is valuable; it is also the best preservation against the mildew by causing an early and vigorous growth of the plant, and for the same reason it is equally efficacious against rust. In the field that we have been describing the evil had actually commenced its ravages, but owing to the ripening of the berry, it had been checked in its progress before doing any serious injury. There are a variety of other ways in which draining is of incalculable benefit to the farmer, the whole we have not room enough to prove the truth of all that has been asserted with regard to it.—Toronto Colonist.

USEFUL RECIPES.

A hot shovel held over varnished furniture will take out white spots.—A bit of glue dissolved in skim milk and water will restore old crape.—Ribbons of any kind should be washed in cold soap-suds, and not rinsed.—If your flat-irons are rough, rub them well with fine salt, and it will make them smooth.—Oat straw is best for sleeping beds; it should be changed once a year.—If you are buying carpet for durability, choose small figure.—A little sweet oil on the hinges of doors will prevent their creaking. Scotch snuff put on holes where crickets come out will destroy them.—Wood ashes and common salt, wet with water will stop cracks of a stove and prevent the smoke from escaping.—A strong [illegible] will soften glue sufficiently to dissolve in cold water.

FALL FEEDING—GRASS LAND BENEFICIAL.

A writer in the Boston Cultivator says he has two meadows. On one he turns his cattle shortly after mowing, each year, and fed it off close to the ground. The other having some young trees on a portion of it, the cattle were kept out, and the after growth allowed to rot on the ground. The hay crop on the former continued to improve in quality and quantity each succeeding year till last year, when the crop was light, while on the latter it decreased year by year, and last year it would scarcely pay the expense of cutting.

EFFECT OF TOBACCO.

Dr. Sully, an eminent English physiologist, and the author of an excellent work upon the brain, says at the at the close of one of his lectures, "I would caution you, as students, from excess in the use of tobacco and smoking, and I would advise you to disabuse your patients' minds of the idea that it is harmless. I have had a large experience of brain disease, and am satisfied that smoking is a most noxious habit. I know of no cause or agent that tends so much to bring on functional disease, and through this in the end, to lead to organic diseases of the brain, to the excessive use of tobacco." No man in Great Britain is so competent to speak on this subject as Dr. Sully, and it is strange that so many young men at the present day should indulge in the pernicious habit of smoking tobacco.

NEW ORLEANS RECIPE FOR CORNING BEEF.

To 100 pounds of beef take 9 pounds of coarse salt, 6 ounces of saltpetre and 5 lbs of sugar. Pulverize the saltpetre and mix the ingredients thoroughly. Pack the beef with the mixture, pound it down, and put a weight upon it.

Information Wanted.

MY WIFE, Elizabeth Lock, left my house on Wednesday afternoon, the 20th June, and has eluded the most diligent search ever since. She was in a state of melancholy or insanity, and apparently very weak, timid, and afraid of strangers; about 60 years of age, but looked younger, of slender habit. Had on a print dress and sun cap, and prunella boots.

Any information that will lead to her recovery will be thankfully received and suitably rewarded.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

[illegible] disease, which [illegible] blood, by which this fluid becomes [illegible] weak, and poor. Being in the circulation it pervades [illegible] body, and may affect [illegible] disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and slothful habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children, unto the third and fourth generation;" entailing, it seems to be the end of him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

In effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must reinvigorate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as Eruptive and Skin Diseases, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Blains and Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Rheumatism, Syphilitic and Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Debility, and, indeed, all Complaints arising from Vitiated or Impure Blood. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

AYER'S
Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can surely withstand or evade them. Their prostrating properties search, and [illegible] and invigorate every portion of the human system, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitality. As a consequence of these [illegible] the invalid who is bowed down with [illegible] or [illegible] debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so safe and inviting.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many dangerous and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis our American Almanac, containing certificates of their [illegible] and directions for their use in [illegible] Complaints, Dose, Fever and Ague, Bilious Remittent, Bilious or Intermittent Fevers, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Rheumatism, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Headache, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every person has occasion for it. Throughout every portion of the country, however, there have been publications of its cures of [illegible] even dangerous diseases of the lungs by its use. Where these exist, [illegible] no enemy to other symptoms of its kind to suppress its use. Nor should any one, suffering only a cough, [illegible] neglect using it, in the hope that it will wear away, as [illegible] such a hope has been the first step in many a [illegible] who [illegible] to the [illegible] of any party or parties concerned, [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Rooms has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the Rooms throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

SLAYER OF THAT BIRD.

Proof of reckless or else barren mind,
Of oberal fondness utterly devoid,
Act of a will to injury inclined,
Why was that melodist say thus destroyed?

That blythesome warbler of its brief life robb'd
By thee, had instincts exquisitely keen,
Music by note had in a heart that throbb'd
Within the fledging of the live machine.

Had beauty, vigor, animate as bold,
Functions fulfilling, usefulness had too,
And from its Maker be it to thee told
A right of life had, yet the thing you slew.

Fashion'd to chaunt in gratitude it's lay
Unto it's Maker, in melodious sphere,
Who did empow'r thee that poor bird to slay,
And thus despoil full many a pleasur'd ear.

True to God's diction, worthily it filled
Duties parental tellesomely pursued,
Ruthless assassin needlessly is killed,
The earnest feeder of a hungering brood.

And what of her who restlessly on flies
From tree to thicket and from thence to sheen,
And of bereavement vehemently cries
For her lost partner in bewailment keen.

Still on and onward clamorously fierce
Shrilly accute in harmony deranged,
Her notes of misery the vex'd hearing pierce
For the blythe carrol is to wailing chang'd.

Her hungering brood in helplessness now left
By this fell act in orphanage are flung
And we who own'd them are of two bereft,
Who hymns at matin and at vesper sung

No debt of duty such to mortal owed
Form'd for volition by His matchless skill
Forth from its throat unpaid-for music flowed
And yet the chorister thy hand must kill!

Say why at bird so cheerily at large,
Charter'd by Heaven to brea'he joyous stanzas,
Did'st thou that weapon murderer discharge?
Enjoyment outraged slayer thee arraigns.

Thus is it ever with the selfish taste
Reckless of sorrow that its lot may roll
On others, or the desolating waste
Its deeds achieve where nothing can console.

Slayer of that bird innocent as glad
And by benificence in wisdom sent,
To lift to Heaven some heart depress'd and sad,
Pause from such triumphs sad of this repent.

COLDSTREAM:

A STORY OF SHIPWRECK.

A large party was assembled to celebrate the feast of St. Patrick, at Ravelstoke Hall, an old country house about two miles distant from the northwest coast of Devon. The various branches of English society are very fairly represented by its component parts. There are two peers, three members of the lower house, some guardsmen, some under graduates a clergyman and a lieutenant in the navy. But our hero is not a representative man; yet he belongs to a class which, called into existence by the accumulated wealth of the nineteenth century, is ever on the increase.

Frederick Tyrawley resembles Sir Charles Coldstream, inasmuch as he has been everywhere and done everything; but he is by no means used up, and can still take an interest in whatever his hand finds to do. Nor is everything everybody else's everything. It is not bounded by Jerusalem and the pyramids.

Mr. Tyrawley has fought in more than one State of South America, and has wandered for more than two years from isle to isle of the Pacific. A mysterious reputation hovers round him. He is supposed to have done many things, but no one is very clear what they are, and it is not likely that much information on the point will be obtained from him, for he seldom talks much and never speaks of himself. His present mission appears to be to kill partridges, play cricket and drum himself. Not that it must be supposed that he has ever been in the habit of wearing less clothing than the custom of the country in which he may have been located required; but only that at the present time he devoted much attention to light waistcoats and gauze neck-ties, braided coats and curled moustachois.

Such as he is, however, he is no object of interest in the feminine portion of the party at Ravelstoke Hall; for he is rich and handsome, as well as mysterious, and he cannot be more than two-and-thirty. And the ladies at Ravelstoke entertain for the man a, for though it is still rare for the fair sex to participate actively in the memorials of the partridge-god, they will always be found hovering in considerable numbers on the outskirts of the feast, and the varieties of the British lady are finely represented.

There are some mammas with daughters to marry, and there are some daughters with a mamma to prevent marrying again, which is, perhaps, the most difficult thing of the two, as she has an income in her own right. There are blondes and brunettes, and pretty, brown-haired, brown-eyed girls who hover between the two orders, and combine the most dangerous characteristics of both, who can, now both blue and pink, and who look prettier in the one color than they do in the other; but who always command your suffrage in favor of that which they are wearing when you look at them.

And there is Constance Boynton with gray eyes and black hair. And she almost exists of feminine appearance might be doubted to those who had not seen her half an hour before breakfast; for no one can ever look as captivating except her face.

Yet Constance is three-and-twenty, and still unmarried. Alas, what cowards men are! The fact is that Constance is very clever; but as Mrs. Mellish (the widow) says, "not clever enough to hide it."

Is she a little vexed at her present condition? Certainly she does not exhibit any tendency to carry out Mrs. Mellish's suggestion, if it has ever been repeated to her. The young men are more afraid of her than ever; and certainly she does say very sharp things, sometimes. Especially she is severe upon idlers, the butterflies of fashionable existence. She appears to consider that she has a special mission to arouse them; but they do not appear to like being lectured. With the young ladies she is a great favorite, for she is very affectionate; and though so beautiful and distinguished she has proved herself to be not so generous a rival as might have been expected. Indeed, it has happened, more than once, that male admiration, rebounding from the hard surface of her manner, has found more yielding metal in the bosoms of her particular friends. Besides, she is always ready to lead the van in the general attack upon the male sex, when the ladies retire to the drawing-room.

Not that she ever says anything behind their backs she would not be ready to repeat to their faces; but in that course probably she would not meet with such general support.

In Mr. Tyrawley she affected to disbelieve. She stated as her opinion to her intimate friends, that she did not believe he ever had done or would do anything worth doing; but that he planned himself on a cheap reputation, which, as all were ignorant of its foundation, no one could possibly impeach.

There is reason to believe that in this instance Miss Constance was not as conscientious as usual; but that she really entertained a higher opinion of the gentleman than she choose to confess. He certainly was not afraid of her, and had even dared to contradict her favorite theory of the general worthlessness of English gentlemen of the nineteenth century. It was one wet morning when she had been reading Scott to three or four of her particular friends—and it must be confessed that she read remarkably well—that she began to lament the decline of chivalry. Tyrawly was sitting half in and half out of range. Perhaps she talked a little at him. At any rate he chose to accept the challenge.

"I cannot agree with you, Miss Boynton," he said. "It is true we no longer wear ladies' gloves in our helmets, nor do we compel ourselves individuals, who possibly may have sweethearts of their own, to admit the superiority of our lady love at the point of the lance; but of all that was good in chivalry, of courage, truth, honor, enterprise, self-sacrifice, you will find as much in the nineteenth century as in the twelfth."

He brightened as he spoke, and it was quite evident that he believed what he said, a circumstance which always gives an advantage to a disputant.

More than one pair of bright eyes smiled approval, and Miss Constance saw a probability of a defection from her ranks. She changed her tactics.

"You are too moderate in your claims for your contemporaries, Mr. Tyrawley.—If I remember right, modesty has always been considered a qualification of a true knight."

"I am not ashamed to speak the truth," he replied; "your theory would have been more tenable before the days of the Crimean war and the Indian mutiny; but the men who hit their cigars in the trenches of the Redan, and who carried the gate of Delhi, may bear comparison with Bayard, or Cœur de Lion."

"Oh! I do not allude to our soldiers," said she, "of course I know they are brave; but"—and here she hesitated a moment, till possibly piqued because her usual success had not attended her in the passage of arms, she concluded—"but to our idle gentlemen, who seem to have no heart for anything."

Tyrawley smiled. "Possibly you may judge too much by the outside," he said.—"I am inclined to fancy that some of those whom you are pleased to call idle gentlemen would be found to have heart enough for anything that honor, or duty, or even chivalry, could find for them to do."

"I hope you are right," said Miss Constance, with a slightly perceptible curl of her upper lip, which implied that she did not think so.

Tyrawley bowed, and the conversation terminated a few minutes afterwards; when he had left the room, the observation of the young ladies was interrupted by Master George Boynton, aged 10, who suddenly attacked his sister.

"I think you are wrong, you know, when you call Tyrawley a humbug."

"My dear," said Constance, with a sneer, "I never said anything so rude."

"Well, you implied it, you know, in your girl's words, and I think you made a mistake; for he can shoot like one o'clock, never misses a thing, and I hear he can ride to no end. He was rather out of practice in his cricket when he came down; but he is improving every day. You should have seen the hit he made yesterday—right up to the coders."

"Do you think there is nothing else for a man to do but ride, and shoot, and play cricket?"

"Oh! that's all very well; but you should hear what Merton, our second master says; and a great brick he is, too. "Whatever you do, do it as well as you can, whether it 's cricket or verses." And I believe if Tyrawley had to fight, he'd go in and win, and no mistake."

"Ah!" said Constance, with a sigh, "he has evidently—what is it you boys call it?—tipped you. Isn't it?"

Sufficient at this result, George walked off to find his friend, and leave a lesson in kindness.

The day lingered on, after the usual fashion of wet days in September, in full country houses. There was a little dance—high-tea dinner, but all retired early in hopes of a fine day on the morrow.

Tyrawley had some letters to write, so that it was past two before he thought of going to bed. He always slept with his window open, and as he threw up the sash, a fierce gust of wind blew out his candle, and blew down the looking-glass.

"Pleasant, by Jove!" he soliloquized. "I wonder whether it's smashed—unlucky to break a looking-glass—I'm hanged if I know where the matches are; never mind; I can find my way to bed in the dark.—What a night!" as a flash of lightning illuminated the room for a moment, and he beat out of the window. "The wind must be about nor-nor-west. Cheerful for anything coming up to Bristol from the southward. I wonder what a storm is like on this coast. I have a great mind to go and see. I shall never be able to get that ball door open without waking them up; what a nuisance! Stay, capital idea! I'll go by the window."

Before starting upon his expedition, he changed the remains of his evening dress for he had been wearing his dressing-gown for a flannel shirt and trousers, while a short pea-jacket and glazed hat completed his array. His room was on the first floor, and he intended to drop from the window-sill; but the branch of an elm came so near, he found that unnecessary, as springing to it he was on the ground, like a cat in an instant. He soon found his way across the country "like a bird," to the edge of the cliff.—The sea for miles was one sheet of foam.

But a flash of lightening discovered a group of figures about a quarter of a mile distant, and he distinguished shouts in the intervals of the storm.

He was soon amongst them, and he found that all eyes were turned on a vessel which had struck on a rock within two hundred yards of the cliff. It is evident that she would go to pieces under their very eyes.

"Is there no way of opening communication with her," he asked of an old coast-guard man.

"Why, ye see, sir, we sent to Bilford for Manby's rockets, but she must break up before they come.

"How far is it to Bilford?"

"Better than seven miles, your honor."

"If we could get a rope to them, we might save the crew."

"Every one of them, your honor; but it ain't possible."

"I think a man might swim out."

"The first wave would dash him to pieces against the cliff."

"What depth of water below?"

"The cliff goes down like a wall, forty fathoms, at least."

"The danger the better. What distance to the water?"

"A good fifty feet."

"Well, I have dived off the main yard of the Chesapeake. Now, listen to me,—Have you got some light, strong rope?"

"As much as you like."

"Well, put a double coil around my chest, and do you take care to pay it out fast enough as I draw upon it."

"You won't draw much after the first plunge; it will be the same thing a suicide, every bit."

"Well, we shall see. There is no time to be lost; lend me a knife."

And in an instant he whipped off his boots, and pea-jacket, then with the knife he cut off the sleeves and passed the rope through them, that it might chafe him less. The eyes of the old boatman brightened. There was evidently a method in his madness. "You are a very good swimmer, I suppose, sir."

"I have dived through the surf at Nukuhova a few times."

"I never knew a white man that could do that."

Tyrawley smiled. "But whatever you do," he said, "mind and let me have plenty of rope. Now out of the way, my friends, and let me have a clear start."

He walked slowly to the edge of the cliff, looked over to see how much the rock shelved outwards; then returned, looked to see that there was plenty of rope for him to carry out, then took a short run, and leaped as if from the springing-board of a plunging bath. He touched the water full five-and-twenty feet from the edge of the cliff. Down into the dark depth he went, like a plummet, but soon to rise again. As he reached the surface he saw the crest of a mighty wave in front of him—the wave that he had been told was to dash him lifeless against the cliff. But now his old experience of the Pacific stands him in good stead. For two moments he drew breath, then, ere it reaches him, he dives below its centre. The water dashing at the cliff, but the swimmer rises far beyond it. A faint cheer rises from the shore as they see him clear upon the rope. The waves follow in succession, and he dives again and again, rising like an otter to take breath, making very steadily onward, though more below the water than above it.

We must now turn to the ship. The waves have made a clean breach over her bows. The crew were crowded upon her stern. They hold on to the bulwarks, and await the end, for no boat can live in such a sea. Suddenly she is hailed from the waters. "Ship a-hoy," shouted a loud, clear voice, which makes itself heard above the storm. "Throw me a rope or a buoy." The life-buoy was still hanging in its accustomed place by the mainmast. The captain almost mechanically takes it down, and with a well-directed aim throws it within a yard or two of the swimmer. In a moment it is under his arm, and in half a minute he is on board.

"Come on board, sir," he says to the captain, pulling one of his wet coats professionally. The captain appeared to be regarding him as visitor from the lower world; so, turning to the crew, he hitched up the rope he had brought from the shore. Then for the first time the object of his mission flashed upon their minds, and a desperate cheer broke forth from all hands, instantly re-echoed from the shore. When a strong rope was attached to the small rope and the communication complete. But we must go to the shore, for the cheers there signs of something up, and there is a lady passenger. Whilst the captain is planning a sort of chair in which she might be moved, Tyrawley lifts her up on his left arm, steadies himself with his right by the upper rope, and walks along the lower as if he had been a dancer. He is the first on shore, for no sailor would leave till the lady was safe. But they soon follow, and in five minutes the ship is clear; five minutes more, and no trace of her is left.

Ravelstoke Hall has been aroused by the noise of the wreck, and Mr. Ravelstoke has just arrived with brandy and blankets. Him Tyrawley avoids; and, thinking he can be of no further use, he betakes himself across the country once more, and by the aid of the friendly elm regains his chamber without observation.

The lady, whom Tyrawley had deposited in a cottage, with a strong recommendation that she should go to sleep immediately, was soon carried off in triumph by Mr. Ravelstoke to the Hall, and welcomed by Lady Grace at 3½ in the morning. There were few of the guests who slept undisturbed that night. The unusual noises in the house aroused every body, and many excursions were made in unfinished costume to endeavor to ascertain what was going on. The excitement culminated when the miscellaneous assemblage who had conducted the captain and some of the crew to the Hall, after being well supplied with ale and the stronger liquors, conceived that it would be the thing to give three cheers at the hour of half-past five.

It was then that Lord Todmorton, an Irish peer, laboring under an erroneous impression that the house was attacked, was discovered on the landing place, in array consisting principally of a short dressing-gown, flannel-waistcoat, and a fowling-piece.

Breakfast that morning was a desultory meal. People finished, and talked about the wreck, and began again. It seemed quite impossible to obtain anything like an accurate account of what had taken place. At last the captain appeared, and though almost overwhelmed with the multiplicity of questions, nevertheless between the interval of broiled ham and coffee, he managed to elucidate matters a little.

Then came the question, Who was it who swam out to the vessel? Tyrawley had only been at Ravelstoke a few days, and was a stranger in the neighborhood.—None of the servants had reached the coast till it was all over, so there had been no one to recognize him.

"I scarcely saw him," said the captain, "but he was a dark tallish man, with a great deal of beard."

"Was he a gentleman?" asked Miss Constance Boynton, who had been taking a deep interest in the whole affair.

"Well, d'ye see, Miss, I can't exactly say; for he hadn't much on; but, if he isn't, he'd make a good one, that I'll go bail for. He's the coolest hand I ever saw. Stay, now I think of it, I shouldn't wonder if he was a naval man, for he pulled his fore-lock, half-laughing-like, and said, "Come no board, sir," to me, when we pulled him up."

"Perhaps it was Rutherford," said Mr. Ravelstoke, naming the lieutenant in the navy, "he is tall and dark."

"And he has been letting his moustache grow since he came on shore," observed a young lady."

"Where is he?"

But Mr. Rutherford was gone down to the cliff to inspect the scene of the disaster.

"Begging your pardon, sir," said the butler, "it could not have been any gentleman stopping in the house, for the door was fastened till the people came down to tell you of the wreck."

At this moment—10½ o'clock, a. m.—Mr. Tyrawley walked into the breakfast room. He was got up, if possible, more elaborately than usual.

"Five minutes more, sir, and Davy Jones' locker would have had all of us. Begging your pardon, Miss," apologizing to Constance.

The captain had already repeated the story a reasonable number of times, and was anxious to finish his breakfast. So Miss Constance gave it all for the benefit of Mr. Tyrawley, dressed in her own glowing periods.

Tyrawley made no observation upon her recital, but took a third egg.

"Well, Mr. Tyrawley," said she at last, what do you think of the man who swam out to the wreck?"

"Why, I think, Miss Boynton,—I think," he said, hesitating, "that he must have got very wet, and I sincerely hope he won't catch cold."

There was a general laugh at this, to which the captain joined; but it is to be feared that Miss Constance stamped her pretty little foot under the table.

Tyrawley turned, and began to talk to Miss Mellish, who was sitting on his right.

As he was speaking, the door on his left opened, and Lady Grace Ravelstoke entered with the lady passenger. The lady heard him speak—and there are some voices which a woman never forgets—and the dangerous journey over the rope had not passed in silence.

She laid her head upon his arm, and said, "Oh, sir, how can I thank you?"

Tyrawley rose, as in duty bound, saying, "Do not speak of it: I did not know when I came off that I was to have the pleasure of assisting you."

But the astonishment of the captain was beyond all control.

"Why, you don't mean to say ——. Well, I never;—dash my wig—well I'm—Here, shake hands, sir, well, you! And he stretched across the table, a horny hand, not much whiter than a pair of mittens.

The grip with which Tyrawley met his overture to do a great deal more in consequence of his identity than the Lady's recognition of her preserver.

The day was as wet as the preceding. Half an hour after breakfast Mr. Tyrawley lounged into the back drawing-room. There sat Miss Constance Boynton, and, by the singular coincidence which favors lovers or historians, she sat alone.

Now Constance had made up her mind that she was bound to apologise to Mr. Tyrawley for her rude speeches of yesterday; she had also decided that she would compliment him on his gallant conduct.

She had, in fact, arranged a neat, quiet, cold, formal, appropriate form of words which would give more expression. And how do you think she delivered them? She got up, and said "O, Mr. Tyrawley!" and burst into tears.

If a proud woman's pride is a shield to thee, O man, as well as to her, against the arrows of love, remember that if ever she throws it away—after she has compelled you to acknowledge its value—you are both left utterly defenceless.

Frederick Tyrawley capitulated at once. They are to be married this month. And if Mr. Tyrawley does not, at some future time, achieve a reputation which no mystery shall cloud, it will not be Mrs. Tyrawley's fault.

A MOTHER'S FAITH.

Among the many striking instances of God's care of His persecuted people, is recorded the case of Mrs. Mason in Scotland. At the time we refer to, her husband was hiding in the morass which spreads over a great part of Galloway. Thither he was driven by Claverhouse, and there he was hidden till peace again gave a breathing time to God's servants.

When the Covenanters in that district determined to have divine service, and for this purpose the godly Mr. Benwich arranged to meet them in a lonely glen beyond the morass, Mrs. Mason decided to attend. Accordingly she took her infant babe, and shutting up her house and committing her four children to God, she set out on her perilous journey.

Returning from the meeting, a neighbor met her and told her her house was destroyed and all her children by fire. Looking calmly at the trembling messenger, she replied: "It is impossible; before I left home I gave my children to God, and I know they are safe." To all the assurances of her friend she steadily answered: "It is impossible!" Hastening forward, she speedily found her faith confirmed, for her house and children were safe, and eagerly looking for her return. The flames which had charmed her neighbor arose from a small cottage on the west farm. Turning to her friends, she said: "I told you God would keep their safe and I am right."

This woman lived long after the darkness of persecution had passed away, and her children all died in good old age, faithful servants of the mother's faithful God. Her husband too came forth from his refuge, and bore witness for many days to the Master's truthfulness.—American Messenger.

GARIBALDI A CANADIAN.

The birth place of the noted Sardinian General has been claimed by several countries, all making out a tolerably clear case. All disputes on this subject may, however, be considered as settled, as we give below proof sufficient to satisfy all thinking individuals that he is a Canadian.

In the year 1812 a noted Iriquois chief, named Garrabaldah, (signifying "Mighty in War,") immigrated from Western New York to Lower Canada. He had several sons, the eldest called Joseph, who was called by the French habitans, who could not pronounce the Iriquois correctly, Garribalde.

In the year 1820 old Garrabaldie died, and Joseph was prevailed upon by a priest to accompany him to Italy. He was educated by this priest, and received Guiseppe as a name, instead of Joseph, and was to write his name Garibaldi. This information was received from Francis Garribalde, at present living near Sorel, with whom the great General constantly corresponds.

Persons still having doubts on this important matter can satisfy themselves by applying to Francis, at Sorel. It can no longer be said that Canada has not produced one great man.—L'Orde, Montreal.

MOVEMENTS OF THE CHAMPION.

Mr. John C. Heenan has been engaged to give a series of pugilistic exhibitions in the principal cities of the Union. It is said that the speculators who have secured the star of the ring are Messrs. Henry Wood and Benjamin Wood, brothers of our distinguished Mayor. Macdonald, Ned Price, Jas. Cusick, and a number of other celebrated professional pugilists, have been also engaged to accompany Heenan, and participate in the fistic exercises. The terms of agreement are as follows:—Heenan is to have $1,000 a-week for twelve weeks, at the end of which time he is to be presented with a diamond pin worth $1,000 Macdonald has refused to engage for a longer time than six weeks, for which he is to have $2,500. Mr. E. E. Price, of Boston, who is, probably, the most accomplished professor of sparring in America, is of nearly the height and weight of Tom Sayers, and a mimic combat between him and Heenan would be no bad imitation of the "international" fight at Farnborough. The line of travel of this distinguished party will comprehend all the principal cities of the United States, beginning, of course, at New York. On Monday evening next, the first exhibition will be given at the New Bowery Theatre. We cannot vouch for the truth of the rumor that the brothers Henry and Ben. Wood will have a friendly set-to.—N. Y. Tribune.

An Irishman had been sick a long time and while in that state would occasionally cease breathing, and life be apparently extinct for some time, when he would come to again. On one of these occasions when he had just awakened from his sleep, his friend, Patrick, asked him.

"And how'll ye know, Jimmy, when ye' dead? per other waking up every time," Bring me a glass of whiskey, and my 'here's till ye, Jimmy,' and if I don't rise and drink, then bury me."

A THRILLING SCENE.

FOUR MEXICAN DROVERS AND THEIR CATTLE SURROUNDED BY FIRE.

TWO MEN CONSUMED.

Correspondence of the Missouri Democrat

Barclay's Fort, N. M., July 9, 1860.

A friend, just arrived from Santa Fe, states that four Mexican herders were driving a herd of cattle through the mountains north of that place, a short time since when the following incident occurred, which I give as I received it:

The mountains were on fire at the time, but thinking the way clear before them, they proceeded up a valley when they found their way barred by an impenetrable wall of fire; in alarm they hastily retraced their steps, in the vain hope that escape might still be possible. But, alas! they were still too late; fire had closed the avenue by which they had entered the valley, and a broad belt of flame encircled them on every side, the area of which was rapidly diminishing every moment. The long drouth had rendered the rubbish and under-growth below as dry as tinder, and the flames licked them up with fearful rapidity; and, springing upward, caught the pine cones above, glossy with resin, and then leaping from tree to tree formed a pillow of fire awful to behold. The affrighted herd, bellowing with fear, dashed through the flames, the most of them escaping badly burned, but some perished. Two of the herders attempted to follow them; but who can breathe in such an atmosphere, walk on burning coals, enveloped in flame, and live?

A few steps only were taken, when their nerves became contracted with the intense heat, their limbs refused to perform their office, and they sank shrinking on a bed of fire, never more to rise. Their comrades heard the dying groans of their companions and wild bellowing of the herd, as they dashed through the sea of fire, and the roaring and crackling of the flames, as they came surging onward, and maddened by despair, they dashed wildly from side to side, eagerly seeking that which they dared not hope to find, and already suffering in anticipation, the agonies of a death too fearful to think of, when a huge rock barred their way, and they saw with a thrill of joy, that a small spring of water gushed out at its foot. Hope revived within them at the sight, and with an energy such as emergency could only inspire, they improved the few remaining moments ere the flames should reach them, in preparing to resist them.—Every thing combustible was removed, until the surrounding base formed them to desist, then inserting some dry branches in the crevices of the rock above the spring, they saturated their blankets with water and spread them out upon them, and seated themselves under their shelter, continued to apply the water as fast as the scanty supply permitted.

Ashes, coals and burning branches fell thickly around them, and their hopes fluctuated rapidly between hope and despair, as their chances of escape increased or lessened. Moments seemed lengthened into hours, and doubtless more than the agonies of death were passed by these poor herders, ere hope ripened into certainty, and they knew that they were indeed saved, as "brands from the burning."

THE HACKMEN AT THE FALLS.

Some of the hackmen at the Falls—there are honorable exceptions—are nuisances of the first class. A correspondent of the Milwaukee Wisconsin relates how one of them was recently done for, as follows:—

A saucy looking fellow drove in front of the Central House, and accosted a tall countryman from the interior of the state:

"Want to ride to Falls? Take you up and back for three dollars."

"How far is it?" says the countryman.

"Five miles," answered the hackman.

"Won't give but two."

Hackman—"Can't take you that; will do it for two fifty."

Country—"Won't give it."

H.—"Well, come on, I'll take you for two."

C.—"Won't give but one fifty."

H.—"Well get in, I must get to go up anyhow."

C.—"If you have to go up, won't give but a dollar."

H.—"All right, get in; it's too little, but I'll do it."

C.—"Must do it for a half; hain't got any more."

H.—"Come on let's have your half."

C.—"No, I won't go; hain't got time, would rather walk."

The hackman drove off, evidently satisfied that he had "boarded the wrong craft," while the countryman shouldered his trunk, and made many mental strides in the direction of Goat Island.

CAUTION TO MOTHERS.

A late English paper says the decrease of "mother's milk" alarms the British Government, who recently appointed a Commissioner to inquire into the results of excessive labor in factories and the welfare of women generally, and this Commissioner reports: "That the proportion of mothers of the well-to-do classes, who can nurse their own children is diminishing: that among women who have no servant there are ailments which are unknown amongst women who have no servants; and that these ailments are worse with women who had two servants, and get very bad, indeed, and with new complications of hypochondria, amongst women who have three servants."

"If we work on marble, it will perish; if we work on brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust. But if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with high principles, with just fear in God and their duty—that, we engrave with a pen of iron, with a point as from the rock for ever, and no power can obliterate or destroy."—Webster.

THE BRITISH DEFENCES.

From the Times.

The House of Commons ought not to require any apology for self-defence, and does not ask any apology. Its members are sufficiently acquainted with the merits of a defensive attitude in dealing with one another. You don't suspect your neighbors of wishing to insult you, but he will like you all the better for wishing to be respected, and even a little feared. If you build a strong party wall between your own house and your neighbour's, it is not because you suspect him of a design to defraud an insurance company, or think his house more than commonly inflammable. It is enough for you that should he happen to catch fire, you will be in some danger. If you raise walls and screens between your garden and his, you simply wish to spare him all temptation to an illicit curiosity. Indeed, half the apparatus of civilization is protective, and even exclusive. So Lord Palmerston was simply resting his application on the ordinary and palpable merits of the case when he last night asked the House for two millions to be immediately raised by Terminable Annuities and spent within a year on our fortifications. There was no occasion for reserve. The utmost frankness was due to the House, and nothing less to any neighbor, far or near. Lord Palmerston meant nothing more than that with six hundred thousand men in arms or on furlough within sight of our shores, aided by a fleet almost equal to our own, both wholly unnecessary for defence, and wielded by the changeable Government of an excitable people, we have to look to ourselves. We don't wish to be at the mercy of anything stronger than ourselves, and not able to answer for its own actions. Such a power may not even wish to subdue us, and even by the follies of our own representatives and agents to humble our pride, to do us considerable damage, to destroy our arsenals or lay our metropolis under ransom. Whatever has been done or even attempted against France herself she may naturally wish to retaliate, and this alone would be reason for sufficient defence. Lord Palmerston puts the case with all feeling of the generous rival who takes pleasure in contemplating the stalwart form and sinewy fabric with the foe with whom he is about to measure himself. We have an antagonist worthy of ourselves, let us then be worthy of him. A few years back we were quite at the mercy of France, as she had we grown. It did us no good. Out of that slackness of ours has arisen a preponderous ambition to beat us even in our own element. What we are now doing is to make up for arrears; and heavy as the estimate for these arrears may seem, Lord Palmerston shows that they are not more than other countries are paying.

With some little abatement, Lord Palmerston adheres to the recommendation of the Commissioners, and proposes that the works be immediately commenced. The magnitude of any conceivable plan for the defence of the metropolis is a sufficient reason for its omission from any programme, especially if it has to pass through the House of Commons. Perhaps, therefore, it was unnecessary that Lord Palmerston should commit himself to the military opinion that the proper defence for a large metropolis is an army in the field. A large army has not always been able to save a metropolis, even under the most favorable circumstances; for if it happens to be beaten, it must make good its retreat, whether a metropolis be behind it or not. But as was shown last night, the enemy might land a large army, and we might have only a small one, and then that would certainly happen that usually happens under such circumstances. However this may be, we are only to proceed on the basis of our existing defences, throwing out our arms to meet the longer arms of the possible invader. It is only the logical consequences of what we are doing already, and have been doing these four hundred years. The House Commons can no more object to adapting our defences to the last improvements in the art of attack than it could in former days to substitute guns for cross-bows, and earth work for stone walls. The seas of the Isle of Wight is conclusive as to the necessity of marching with the times. We have occasionally weather so settled in what we call our variable climate, that a steam fleet might cross from Cherbourg in the course of the night, and land a force in that Isle sufficient to overpower such troops as they might find in it. In a few hours it would be able to bring guns to bear with fatal effect on the shipping at Spithead, and even at Portsmouth. The art of destruction is not only improved; it is improving, inasmuch that before we have armed ourselves, at immense cost, with one kind of gun, another has been discovered which promises to be better; and there is absolutely no bounds to the power of ordnance. What we hear every day at Shoeburyness, and what we saw the other day at Wimbledon, are sufficient to warn us to keep the enemy further from our butts, if those butts happen to be dockyards and arsenals containing our navy and the materials for its constructing and repair.

No one would decline the necessary improvement of our defences to be a work of a Minister, taken upon trust by a confiding Parliament, for better or for worse. We all share with Mr. Bright his laudable anxiety to take an intelligent part in this momentous undertaking. Even after Lord Palmerston's very frank exposition, and after Mr. Sidney Herbert's lucid statement of particulars, it was not to be expected that the House should adopt at once the resolutions laid before it. True, every member had a copy of the report, of which the Ministerial professor to be the sum; true, too, many members had properly made up his mind; but there is a decency in these things, and the British Legislature is especially coy in its deference to the administrative power. A week is given for deliberation, and that week may be turned to some purpose. We would fain hope that the delay will not be productive of the usual consequences. If five hundred independent minds are to study the report of the Defence Commission with no other wish than to arrive at a perfectly original and incompatible conclusion, and to act upon them, at whatever risk, why then the report will only add one more layer to the pile. A certain degree of submission, or at least co-operation, is necessary when the public safety is in question. It is not every one who knows how to attack a fort, or to construct one; so we must defer to authority, whenever its rules. One thing is very conclusive — the French find their works at Cherbourg, Toulon, and elsewhere, coloured as their ends and their cost, totally unequal to the improved powers of modern artillery. They are therefore driven to the course recommended by our own Commissioners — advance their defences to meet the longer range of the enemies guns. We can do nothing less with our own much less efficient fortifications.

The wife of a member of the Halifax corps of Rifle volunteers," named Mann, having lately presented him with a son, he has since had it christened by the regimental title of Edward Rifle Mann. May the "cap of a gun" prove worthy of the name.

MOB LAW IN ST. LOUIS.

TWENTY HOUSES OF ILL FAME SACKED AND FURNITURE DESTROYED.

From the St. Louis Democrat, July 26.

At ten o'clock last night some forty or fifty persons simultaneously appeared on the levee, near the foot of Almond street, armed with axes, crowbars, sledge hammers and similar implements, with which, and with a rush and hurrah, they proceeded up Almond street, attracting an additional crowd as they advanced. The object of this apparently sinister, certainly ominous and decidedly startling movement, was to clean out, smash up, tear in pieces, stave to atoms and burn to ashes whatever was cleanable, smashable, tearable, staveable, combustible in the notorious nests of bawdy houses which cluster on Almond and neighboring streets. A den kept by a Mrs. Hoppe, on Almond, between Second and Main streets, was riddled with astonishing speed and effectiveness. Another on Second, between Poplar and Almond, and one below Almond on Second, were successively attacked, despoiled, and their contents destroyed.—The entire row on Almond, between Third and Fourth streets—some six tenements—shared the same fate. The property of Madam Haverafft, on the southwest corner of Almond and Fourth streets, was next assaulted, and similarly rifled. Madame Belle Beason's notorious hole on the north side of Almond, between Second and Third streets, had previously been visited by the destroyers.

As the work of devastation progressed, multitudes of citizens assembled, hundreds of whom joined assiduously in aiding the enterprise. At first a party of the police offered resistance, but were attacked with rocks, one of which struck policeman Joseph Friese upon the stomach, inflicting a wound which may prove fatal. The police succeeded in arresting three of the rioters.

In the affray some twenty shots were fired by the "stars," to intimidate the crowd, but happily no one was hit. A large crowd accompanied the officers and their prisoners to the police station, and a disposition is said to have been evinced to effect a rescue but the attempt was not made..

The path of the destroying mob was marked by blazing bonfires, in which were consuming the wreck of the smashed furniture of the houses just sacked. At Second and Almond, on Almond, between Third and Fourth, on Fourth at Almond, on Myrtle near Eighth, and at still other localities, these fires were successively rising, illuminating the scenes of sack and destruction, and attracting additional multitudes of wondering citizens and women, and even children. The police yielded the point, and the mob were left to accomplish their work without further molestation, so far as we could discover until at least eleven o'clock. At that hour the excitement continued and the work was still progressing. Before we left the district, not less than twenty tenements had been "cleaned out," and it was in contemplation to finish ten or twenty more.

So far as we can learn, the prevalent sentiment was one of regret that so lawless and wholesale a destruction of property was permitted, while the salutary effect of breaking up these establishments was undisputed. But it was thought disgraceful that it should be deemed necessary for the mob to do a work which should in some manner be effected, so far as was desirable, by the enactment and enforcement of law.

The tenement at the southwest corner of Fourth and Almond, was Bill Clinton's noted South Fourth street Exchange. Adjoining it was a house and a cigar store kept by some Fancy French woman. Both these establishments were thoroughly rifled. In the rear, a defence was made by parties inside, who fired several shots into the crowd, but without injuring any person, so far as we learned.

The feminine denizens of these destroyed rookeries were seen fleetly scattering in all directions, and their passage through the thronged streets was made the occasion of very uncomplimentary shouts, while nothing like personal violence towards them was thought of.

LATER.—The police mustered in force at half-past eleven o'clock, and effected the arrest of about fifty of the rioters. At one o'clock the mob was still at work, but less violently, and the arrests were still continuing.

Policeman Kennedy suddenly dropped dead at Fourth and Market streets, from heat exhaustion.

THE TIMBER TRADE.

A large and influential deputation of those interested in the Timber Trade waited on Hon. Mr. Vankoughnet at Quebec on Tuesday last. Mr. Wm. McD. Dawson headed the deputation, when the following memorandum was read, representing the views of the Quebec Board of Trade, and the lumber merchants of that and other cities:—

First.—They pray that his Excellency in Council may be pleased to rescind the late order in Council by which interest is to be charged on Timber Dues from 30th of September for timber on which the owners have not realised at that date, and that the collection of such dues in the port of Quebec be conducted on the same principle as heretofore, by which while the Crown has always been secure of the amount due, general satisfaction has been afforded to the trade. They urge that as no loss has ever resulted from the system lately in force, there is no possible ground for this new exaction except that by securing an additional sum from the trade, already heavily harassed with ground rents, timber dues, culling fees, broom dues, sliding, &c., the latter being a charge of the same nature as that from which our commercial interests in the Province have lately been relieved, by the first act of the Parliament, session.

Second.—That the late order in Council increasing the fee for "measuring off" many on board Timber to examining and the fees for culling and measuring timber generally reduced to the original rates fixed by the Act, such fees having been, that time sufficient, not only for the requirements of the office but even to create a large surplus fund.

They also urge in support of the first of the above that the security for the crown dues is equal if not superior to the security for duties on bounded goods on which no interest is charged, the timber in Quebec being not only in bond in fact, but absolutely immovable without the knowledge and consent of the collector.

Quebec, 31st July, 1860.

As regards the first clause, the commissioner expressed his decided opinion against the views of the deputation on the point but would lay the matter before his colleagues, and would at least be disposed to consider the question as to whether the time might be extended beyond the 30th September before imposition of interest.

Various suggestions were made on the second clause, and the commissioner, who said he was not so well acquainted with the details in this case, promised his earnest consideration, with a view to meet their wishes, and would always be happy to get any further information from them upon the subject.

THE MADNESS OF TRIFLING WITH DISEASE.

Truths For Those Who Reason.

There are thousands of lunatics at large. Is the man sane who shows more solicitude to keep his house in good repair than to preserve his health or prop his failing constitution? Such a man is, as Shakspeare has it, essentially mad, without seeming so.—Besides, there is no excuse for remaining sick, when the means of recovery have been placed within the reach of every valetudinarian. The great and good HOLLOWAY, volunteering the resources of a well-stored and powerful intellect in the service of humanity, has sought, found, combined, and applied the antidotes to every disorder which assails the system, either from within or without. His two world celebrated remedies are achieving, in all regions and climates, and over the most frightful forms of disease, the most signal triumphs. Bulletins of Holloway's victories appear in every public journal that issues from the press, and ten thousand certificates of cures accomplished by his Pills and Ointment, are published annually in Europe and this country. No longer are mineral poisons and paralyzing narcotics considered necessary in the practice of physic. The new medicinal wonders of the nineteenth century have suspended them.

The dyspeptic, the scrofula-stricken, the victims of liver complaint, of eruptive disease, or, worse than all, of mineral medicines, rejoice at the salutary revolution.

Above all, the feebler sex in every condition of life, and in all countries, have reason to congratulate themselves that Professor Holloway's remedies have been given to the world. It would seem that their mild, conservative action has a peculiar and most beneficial effect upon the female system and constitution at the critical periods of life.—In girlhood, maturity, and old age, as maiden and as wife and mother, fragile and sensative woman finds in these preparations the surest means of quieting every pain, regulating every disordered function, and replacing torpor and debility with activity and strength.

The value of such a medicine as Holloway's Pills as a household remedy cannot be over appreciated. Husbands and fathers know little of the aches and pains to which the feebler members of their families are subjected, in consequence of their sedentary habits, and the susceptibility of their nervous systems. They suffer uncomplainingly. Diffidence, perhaps, prevents them from applying to a physician; or if they do seek medical aid, it is to no purpose. But in Holloway's remedies, they have a sure means for relief, and in the accompanying directions and advice, a chart that, if implicitly followed, will guide them to renewed health and cheerfulness.—"Home Journal."

AN ELOPEMENT AND HOW IT ENDED.

From the Detroit Adviser.

It seems that some time since a man named Stayley, who had been living on bad terms with his wife in Port Huron, and who also had become much involved in debt, suddenly left that place, and until lately was lost sight of. A few weeks ago, however, he turned up in Buffalo, where he boarded at the house of a respectable widow lady named Thompson. Representing himself as being a man of property, he had persuaded her to give up keeping boarders, dispose of her furniture, and marrying him, remove to Detroit. This being finally settled, it was further arranged that the lady's nephew, who is a well known minister at Troy, N. Y., should have met them here on Monday last, Deacon-like ceremony, Stayley very liberally offering to pay all his expenses.

Before leaving Buffalo, Stayley, by exhibiting a letter purporting to be written by Wm. A. Butler, Esq., of this city, and which alluded to a deposit of several thousand dollars lying in his bank to his (Stayley's) credit, succeeded in borrowing of different individuals a considerable amount of money. With this he and his affianced bride started for Detroit, reaching here one day last week.

In the meantime some of the lady's friends in Buffalo, hearing of the financial transactions, had become suspicious that all was not right, and so were led to telegraph to this city, inquiring whether the man really had the money on deposit as he pretended. The reply, of course, being in the negative, a lawyer here was made acquainted with the facts, and was requested to watch for the arrival of the fugitives. All the hotels were frequently visited, but nothing could be found of the parties till on Saturday last, when Mrs. Thompson, by calling on an old friend, gave a clue to their whereabouts. It seems, that at Finny's Hotel, where they had stopped, Stayley had registered an assumed name, thus baffling any one who might be on the lookout for him. A warrant was instantly procured for his arrest, but the bird had flown. Probably finding his villainy exposed, he had again suddenly changed his location, this time not only taking with him the funds belonging to both, but actually leaving the poor woman to pay the hotel bill. Mrs. T., of course, was thunder struck at this new aspect of things, but having satisfied herself that her gay Lothario had really deserted her, with a heavy heart set out on her return to Buffalo.

Stayley, we believe, has not yet been found, and as it is probable he will escape the punishment his villainy deserves.

His victim, no doubt, has but a poor opinion of the resources of the elopement, and will hereafter be a wiser if not a richer woman.

BLONDIN ALMOST ROASTED.

We find the following paragraph in the Cincinnati Gazette, of Friday, Aug. 10:

Mons. Blondin, the celebrated tight rope performer, met with a serious accident night before last during his exhibition at Cheltenham. After dusk he gave a performance of travelling a wheelbarrow across a rope, and to make the feat more terrific, he encircled himself in a blaze of fire works, which were ignited simultaneously with his starting. Before he had accomplished half his task, one of the pieces prematurely exploded and set fire to his clothing. The peril of his situation could not be seen by the thousands of spectators below, in consequence of the continued emission of sparks, and the adventurous Blondin instead of trying to do but walk the rope and suffer the torture of being slowly roasted. Having accomplished the distance, he by his own efforts succeeded in extinguishing the flames, but not before his back was very badly burned.

The rope was stretched across a street, at a distance of seventy-five feet from the ground; and none save Blondin could have withstood the pain that he must have suffered. He was confined to the opinion that the Mons. will not attempt any more tight rope performances with pyrotechnic accompaniments. It is very well to amuse the varying visitors of Niagara, in front of the Falls, with cooks, &c.; but shrouded in a sheet of flame, with a chance of having the latter added to that of falling, exercise a little too much of the dangerous to be much relished even by the intrepid Blondin.

TRAVELLED PRINCES OF WALES.

From the Athenæum.

There is a Prince of Wales on the same wending his way by a course which Princes of Wales never yet followed, to an object which none of the young gentlemen bearing that proud title ever yet cared for. The earliest of those travelled youths went abroad under mournful auspices; misery was the fellow-wayfarer of some; others went with menace against the land which they visited, and where they were little welcome. The first of them who "Left Old England on the lee" was scarcely thirteen years of age when his mother Isabella led him over to France, and in a few months of 1325 and the following year unconsciously moulded him into the dethroner of his father Edward of Caernarvon.

The traces of the next Prince of Wales are found in words which still ring with the echoes of glory. Cressy, won at fifteen years of age; Poictiers in a princely manhood; and that brilliant sojourn of nine years in Guienne, which rendered the governorship of our Black Prince there the admiration of statesmen, as his deeds of arms had secured for him the love of every soldier.

From his return thence in 1371, above fourscore years elapsed before we met with another Prince of Wales leaving, in this case most unwillingly the shores of England for a foreign land. A boy, nine years of age is driven ashore at L'Ecluse with his mother, the indomitable Margaret of Anjou. The boy had known sorrow long before that; but now he begins a seven years' exile, the happiest years of his chequered life, during which his mother trained him to be worthy of the throne of Henry the Sixth. When the lesson was completed this Prince of Wales returned only to find a bloody grave at Tewkesbury.

Again half-a-dozen princes succeed to the title, all home-keeping youths. Then comes Charles Stuart, with his picturesque character and romantic miseries. He goes to Spain, not like his predecessor, the Black Prince, in arms, to come back victorious, but in love, to come back baffled and humiliated. His was the most unpopular and unprofitable voyage ever made by Prince of Wales. To it succeeds another voyage. It is a June morning of 1645; and it is freighted rarely. Noblest of all there, in point of rank, in a good-humoured lad of sixteen, who occasionally takes the helm in hand, and to whom Jermyn and Digby speak with deference. It is young Charles Stuart, on his way to St. Germains, not to set foot in England again till long and weary years have passed away, and finally open to him the golden opportunity which he so lamentably abused.

Of the two succeeding Stuart Princes who held the title by courtesy of their followers, but not by the law of the land, they were necessarily travellers abroad; but we pass these princely travellers against their will to notice the Princes of Wales of the House of Brunwick. These have travelled to, but never from, England until now, in the person of young Alfred Edward. The first Brunswick Prince with this English title did not sleep on English ground until he had counted more than 30 years, and then he came among us with more love for what he had left behind than regard for what he was arriving at. One singularity concerning him is, that he had a very narrow escape of visiting America, under circumstances altogether different from those which mark the progress to Canada of the present heir of England. Lord Berkeley was so much moved by the ferocious hatred of George the First for this scapegrace of a son, that he offered to relieve his royal and suffering Lord, by kidnapping the Prince, and so disposing of him amid the Transatlantic plantations, that his living whereabouts should never more be known to mortal man! If all the reported details of this story be true, it displays wonderful instinct of race in the Berkeleys—one of whom kept his castle for the "disposing" of the very first man who bore the title of "Wales,"—poor Edward of Caernarvon!

No other heir-apparent of the same family made even so near an approach to "going abroad" during his beirship as this. Frederick, the father of George the Third, traversed the sea in his twenty-second year to assume among our great grandsires the dignity of English Princes. There is a tradition among some of the old officers of the household of George the Fourth, that prior to the Regency, he made a stolen visit to the Duke of Orleans. The tradition is mainly upheld by the Prince's familiarity with the typography of Paris; but such a knowledge would imply that he must have been tolerable well known also; and this story we take to be apocryphal.

Finally, we have now, for the first time, a Prince of Wales moving from England over the waters compelled by adversity, or uninfluenced by a spirit of aggression.—Happy circumstance and praiseworthy purpose alone accompany this son of an English mother. May Canada return us our Prince with new experiences, happy memories, and endowments which shall make of his manhood a time of glorious usefulness, and a period to be pointed at as exemplary and felicitous, for ever!

A DANGEROUS GIFT.

The Dublin Evening Post says:—"The discovery of a fearful attempt at assassination has startled the faith of Torbert, and has occasioned considerable excitement in the family against whom the annihilation was intended. Three weeks ago there little box was directed to Colonel Patterson, Torbert House. On the direction card were the names of several lady members of his family, and intimating that a letter would be found inside which would explain all.—The Colonel struck with the singularity of the affair of receiving a box of which he knew nothing, and fearing that injury might be done hereby contained with it, determined not to open the mysterious consignment until further consideration might elucidate its meaning. Accordingly it was locked up in a room, and continued there for three weeks without any information being received regarding it. Several members of his household having shaken the box, pronounced its contents to be either sand or powder; eventually, however, in order to see what it did contain, the wary old soldier, placed it at a distance of 100 yards or more, fired a pistol at the lid, when bang went the box with a loud report, shattering into pieces a large stone against which it was placed. Assured, the Colonel ran up, and to his astonishment discovered that his "little present" was nothing more nor less than an infernal machine. It was filled with powder and a dozen lucifer matches so arranged in the inside that if the box were opened in the usual way, certain destruction would be the consequence. A magisterial inquiry is being made into the affair."

There are now 46,000 Ribbon weavers out of work in Coventry, England, in consequence of the inability of the manufacturers to pollute the "list of" pabon" drawn up in Manchester. Similar privations prevail among the unemployed operatives.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16th, 1860.

Complaints are beginning of a blight of the potato crop. In some localities the tops are drying up, this will cause the crop to be deficient, and the roots small. It is not known with certainty if the rot has made its appearance. Turnips and carrots never looked better, or promised a larger yield, corn looks well. The early sowed spring wheat is being cut. Oats and pease are coming on fine. We should have plenty good beef this year, pastures are good. Fodder of all kinds abundant. We have plenty, may we have gratitude.

☞ The Executive Committee of the County Temperance Union Association have wisely taken steps to arrange that the various Temperance organizations in the County will take a prominent position on the occasion of the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to this Town. In Newfoundland and New Brunswick the Temperance banners have been foremost in the demonstrations of loyalty, and in every place of call in the Province the distinguished visitors will be welcomed with open arms by the Temperance army. We are convinced that 1,000 Temperance men could be mustered with regalia and rosette in this Town on that occasion, which would make as imposing a feature as could be introduced into the reception here.

SABBATH SCHOOL PIC-NIC.—On Friday afternoon last a pic-nic of the teachers and scholars of the Sunday School in connection with St. Andrew's Church was held in a beautiful grove near Mr. Chamberlen's residence. An excellent refreshment was provided of which fully 200, old and young, partook. Short but pointed addresses were delivered by gentlemen who were present, and a choir under the leadership of Mr. D. Law, sung a few very appropriate pieces of music. Everything that could contribute to the pleasure of the occasion was provided, and the respected pastor of the church and the teachers of the school merited the thanks of the congregation and the friends who were by invitation present, for the kindness shown them. We cannot neglect to repeat the fact stated by the pastor that a gift of an addition of 100 volumes of books had been made to the library of the school by J. Hughesten, Esq., a good testimony of the earnestness of that gentlemen in the moral instruction of the young.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW FOR JULY.

Republished by L. Scott & Co., 54 Gold Street, New York. Price $3 per annum.

I. Strikes: Their Tendencies and Remedies—II. The Mill on the Floss.—III. Rawlinson's Brampton Lectures, 1859.—IV. The Post Office Monopoly.—V. Ary Scheffer.—VI. The Irish Education Question.—VII. Germany: its Strength & Weakness.—VIII. Thoughts in Aid of Faith.—IX. Grievances of Hungarian Catholics.—X. The French Press.—XI. Contemporary Literature.

The foregoing concise enumeration of the Contents of the present number is more convincing than any laboured commentary we might write, of the value of review literature. It is a fair specimen of the variety which characterizes every number of the series of re-publications which this forms a part. Questions in Politics, Social and Political Economy, Theology, The Fine Arts, and Education, which can only be superficially touched upon in the newspaper press, have undergo that calm consideration and discussion best calculated to insure the formation of a correct judgment, and to elicit the truth. Reflecting faithfully the impress of passing events upon the minds of the thinking men of the day, these Reviews form an invaluable Companion to the Newspaper. The newspaper has barely time to record the transactions of the day; the Review notes the principles at work, and holds aloft the lamp of reason and experience. In the present disturbed state of the world, these publications are deserving of careful attention, and the different principles represented by each Review afford the reader an invaluable means of comparison. Each number is complete and consistent with itself; and it, therefore, far preferable to any compilation from various sources which makes heterogeneous articles and combines inconsistent views.

The present number we observe commences a volume, as also does Beadwood's Magazine for July, and we believe one or two of the others thus rendering the present a desirable moment to commence subscription.

Prices of our Review, $3 a year. Price of the four Reviews, $8. "Blackwood" and the four Reviews, $10.

THE "EDINBURGH REVIEW" FOR JULY.

Republished by L. Scott, & Co., 54 Gold Street, New York, Price $3 per annum.

The present number contains an unusually variety of articles—no less than twelve on the subjects of the most striking interest in the literary and political world. Our readers cannot be too often reminded of the practice of this and the other leading reviews of giving prompt attention to the topics of the day, and by their deliberation and research correcting the hasty impulses of the moment. The mere titles of the principal articles in this number of the Edinburgh are sufficiently attractive, and need no comment from us to indicate their scope or purport. It is enough to say that they are all subjects on which information by a competent authority is very acceptable; and if any one wishes to make further research he will generally find numerous indications of authorities by reference to which he may verify or correct the statements and arguments of the reviewer. The titles referred to are as follows; Chevalier on the probable Fall in the Value of Gold; Latest Geological Discoveries; The Patrimony of St. Peter; Mrs. Grote's Memoir of Ary Scheffer; Prince Dolgoroukow on Russia and Serf Emancipation; Correspondence of Humboldt and Varnhagen von Ense; Cardinal Mai's Edition of the Vatican Codex. It may be as well to remark that this number commences a volume; and though each is perfect in itself, and subscriptions may be made at any time, yet there is an obvious propriety and convenience in securing complete volumes.

Price of one Review, $3 a year. Price of the four Reviews, $8. "Blackwood" and the four Reviews, $10.

☞ The Niagara Falls excursionists arrived home all safe on the Port Hope tram this forenoon, after a most pleasant trip.—We will give particulars in next issue.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—It has often been made cause of complaint that the Board of School Trustees in this Town do not condescend to give the rate-payers an account of their proceedings at their stated meetings.—I find it is common elsewhere to report the proceedings of the Trustee Boards, and here having two local newspapers, and a member of the Board conducting one of these, yet, save the annual Report, I do not remember of seeing a reference even to the doings of the Board in either paper for a long period.

The rate-payers are deeply interested in the doings of this body, having had to hand over something like £4,000 to it for the School edifice, or as the Guardian folks would call it, a "brick yard," and being taxed besides for 400 or £500 a year for current expenses of the school, they may well feel interested in the movements of the managers of so much of their property. I say nothing of the yet deeper interests they feel in the important work of educating their children, and I am sure I speak the sentiments of nine-tenths of the ratepayers in saying that we should be informed as to the doings of a body upon whom so much devolves. It is no way to get our information at the street corners, or to be told that Mr. A. heard Mr. B. say so and so.

Let the Board provide the means to publish their proceedings. I will answer for it, Mr. Editor, that you will publish them freely and without charge, if furnished to you. I have been led to these reflections from a rumour which reached me of the doings of the Board at its last meeting. I of course cannot speak positively as my information is not official, if it were I might offer some comment thereon, as it is I only wish just now to call public attention to the fact that we are not furnished with a public notice of the proceeding of our Trustees at their meetings, and to ask if there is not a possibility to remedy this defect in the future. I would suggest that if the Board do not see fit to furnish an account of their doings to the Press, they be requested to allow the reporters of the Press to attend their meetings and give them facilities to obtain whatever information they may consider useful to the public.

Yours very truly,
AGRICOLI.

THE GUARDIAN OF PUBLIC MORALS AGAIN.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR,—Your cotemporary has become like a lamb, as far as the Town is concerned. He seems to think there is going to be a wind fall or something else when the Prince of Wales visits our good town. I trust His Royal Highness will notice him, and give him a star to wear on his right breast, for he is certainly enchanted at the idea of the visit. The milk of human kindness has began to flow in his veins—for only see the manner in which he speaks of the Mayor. I could scarcely trust to my eyes when I read it. "What's up," I asked again, so extraordinary a specimen of concealing for the time being what is within, I have seldom seen. I was taught when I went to school that words were signs of ideas, and used to express ideas—he certainly must use words to conceal his. I would respectfully suggest to His Worship to beware—the oily sikky words used in reference to him are portentous—are like the calm preceding the tornado, or to use a vulgar simile they resemble the reputed conduct of a dame that "lets you all over with blarney and then eat your pipe." That a man will jump Jim Crow so nimbly, proven that you are never safe with him, he is not to be found where you last left him. A mere creature of circumstance blows, blazes, rages, tears, blusters, cajoles, praises, eulogizes, commends, condemns or cleans, just as the mood takes him, and while asking after your health he may excite you in the fifth rib; however, we must be "say," when he is in his good mood. I presume we shall see no more naughty things till after the Prince is gone.

I am, sir, yours, &c.,
MENTOR.

THE WATER POWER OF PETERBORO.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—When last week addressing you by your influence, I spoke of the profuse application of water power here, and as a luminous rule in this young and, thrice Heaven, wonderously vigorous country.—To some it seems it is by no means obvious that water power can be wasted—or where ignorance is bliss it is folly to be wise,—while to the same person it would seem absurd to ask them had they ever been thirsty or known a mill to stand idle through want of water. However come it might be to argue the point or refute such objections it is still more easy to state one or two facts demonstrative of what can be accomplished by an inconsiderable but continuous supply of water.

In the oldest gin distillery in England, not three miles from St. Pauls or more than one from Westminster Abby, a tank covers the very spacious still-houses and malting-rooms, and between the rain-water thereup caught and the superfluous supply pumped from the Thames and wells for the purpose of distillation, a water-wheel of some fifty feet in driven between what is termed the tides. Wheels of the magnitude spoken of in my last are rarely driven up to one evolution per minute, and unless by the most narrow scrutiny at the centre of their axis or shaft are scarcely of discernable movement. A wheel such as I describe is invariably made of iron, and between the beautiful symetry of its formation through its tension rods and braces and the dignity of its noiseless motion is as unlike the fidgety little flutter-wheel once so common here as the Admiralty chronometer to a Dutch clock, a Ducal chariot to a wheelbarrow, or a Chancellor or Chief Justice of England is to a Peterboro Advocate or Attorney, for I really know not which class to fling them to. By the way the Great Eastern's paddle-wheels cannot possibly be much beneath the extreme of my quoted diametres. Since I last wrote I have looked at this much and properly much talked of race-way of Mr. Dixon's and my visit has given rise to various ideas in connection with water-power and the supply of that wondrous element. As a work throughout it looks heavy enough to be the undertaking of a wealthy firm rather than of an individual. For an individual it is just now quite as much of an enterprise as any national man could under the circumstances ask another to undertake in the prospect of renting power for mill or manufactory. But I take leave to say a thing are done which may sound or read strange but which I find many thinking persons likely to agree with me upon. Before declaring this I say that as your correspondent "Ubique" remarked, this town is in perceptible progress towards fulfilling long-deferred realization of anticipated importance. She stands concentric in a space where, at any range or point she may be as a centre, said to have a radius of 12 miles before she encounters counteractive influence. This area, sir, would constitute no petty Shire in Merry England, while upon such a surface there would be seen sundry Peterboros. The day has but dawned and by-and-by the wonderers or quid nunacs will discover what that wonderful individual Mr. Dixon has been scattering his hundreds for. No one unconversant with water application or mill-races can by any means realise the amount of power he has gained by this I admit serious undertaking until they shall have seen the fall of his artificial cascade at our Bridge, where his discharge-gate will some day be. Heavy as is the work he gains if he chooses to use such I would say some sixteen sites for wheels in a length of much less than half-a-mile. In the city of Cork one flour-mill close to Main street is supplied by a stone-built race-way of nigh two miles in length, the run of the mill being under control of the flood-tide of the river Lee. The celebrated mills of New Lanark on the property of the mistaken Robert Owen have the body of the Clyde at command where its volume is much below that of the Otonabee but with every requisite degree of fall.

What Town of Greenock has under the ownership of a chartered corporation called the Shaws Water Company a stream of water over which I have leapt, and that stream is supplied from an artificial reservoir large enough to be dignified by the name of Lake. Loch Tom as far as I can now recollect is seven miles from Greenock and this race-way is for some two miles a continuous piece of paved masonry.

The stream of water supplying the very long necklace of mills in Kent that terminate at Crayford is no wider than Dixon's race-way. Perhaps nowhere is water both as to purity and protection from waste more jealously guarded than in Kent county where more paper is produced than in any similar extent of country. There is however other manufactures beside paper a very varying and general application of water-power that surprises the examiner of this large County's resources. Before relinquishing this matter I would state that the word dam has apparently on two sides of the Atlantic a very different meaning—here any obstruction across the bed of a river however loosely it may be laid down constitutes the object thus named. In Britain the term means a fabric of compactness, solidity and a thoroughly water-tight condition arresting the whole of a stream or river and compelling its course at the will or direction of the constructor. What we have here compared with dams having the age of centuries and everywhere met in Europe are truly costless structures, though very possibly quite expensive enough to the builders. Such a thing as I allude to where what is, called Dixon's dam is would, at no sacrifice of advantage, throw much more water over the slide and also more into his race. I could name at will dams on various Old Country rivers not leaking a hogshead of water per diem.

And now in conclusion as to the matter alluded to above in this letter. Assuming what I am convinced is the case that Dixon's position legally gives him control of half the river by diversion of that society to the Peterboro side, he has saved in not having his race-way half as wide again as it now is. Had it been of a wider cut the stream could have been taken beneath the bridge road and in flume conducted as I'm to the mill—once Yates'. The sixteen or eighteen mill-sites of Dixon's will not by-and-by suffice for this place, no aqueduct will yet penetrate the rock spoken of and then a day will have come when I would not accept the largest amount of property or wealth known to have been accumulated in these parts as a fifty-year's purchase of Dixon's rent-roll.

Thanking you, Sir, for your indulgence, with the hope that Peterboro like Glasgow may ever flourish,

I am, yours respectfully,
HIRAM.

TRUE HEROES.

Weep not for the fallen brave,
They are a nation's highest pride;
Behold their country's banners wave,
While on the field or deck they died.
What Scottish bosom beats not high,
What lightnings fire the Switzer's eye,
Roused by the spirit-stirring spell,
Of Wallace, and the name of Tell?
The Britos, Pole, and warrior Greek,
Can turn to many a hallowed name,
With glory mantling on the cheek,
And hear departed heroes speak,
The language of immortal fame.

Weep not for the fallen brave,
Nor deem, oh, deem not they are gone;
Around us are the gifts they gave,
Then think not we are here alone.
The viewless spirits of our heroes
Linger above, around, and near us;
Their deeds fail not death's withering glance,
They are the world's inheritance.
Flowers of immortal hue they bloom,
Stars in the firmament of night,
Lights to gild all history's gloom,
And save the world a darker doom.
When tyrants gather in their might.

The giant despots of the earth,
Wrapt in their winding-sheet of crime,
Who wasted release and deemed it mirth,
Hang on the wearied wing of time.
Their fiery gunships did unfold
Their spirits of a demon mould;
Through blazing seas award them fame,
Blood-woven shadows stain their name,
Their crimes have wrapped the world in shade,
They forged the fetters of the slave,
Their names may live, but flame shall fade,
What boots it where their dust is laid;
These—these are not the fallen brave.

Murder of an Irish Missionary at Damascus.

NEW YORK, August 11.

The Adriatic arrived this morning with news to the 1st inst.

Turkey has accepted the proposals for intervention made by the Convention at Paris, with some modifications.

A military Convention had been concluded between Garibaldi and General Clary.

The Neapolitans keep their forts at Syracuse, Agosta and Messina.

The navigation of the straits of Messina is free.

Consols 93¾ a 93¼. Money 93¾ for account. Provisions dull.

The Bavaria arrived at Cowes on the 29th.

The French proposal for intervention subject to the acquiescence of the Porte, was accepted by the Powers.

The Turkish Ambassadors claims essential modifications.

Liverpool Markets—Breadstuffs—Flour quiet and easier, but unchanged. Wheat steady. Corn dull—mixed 30s a 30s 6d. Beef heavy—quotations maintained. Pork dull. Bacon quiet. Lard steady at 58s a 63s.

The Adriatic brings 260 passengers, including Lady Franklin and niece, and Donald McKay. She left Southampton at 6 o'clock on the evening of the 1st.

The Convention agreed to by Garibaldi and Clary also says that the citadel of Messina will not fire on the town.

The Garibaldian colours will take full rank with the Neapolitan flag.

Naples is tranquil, but agitation prevailed in the Provinces.

It is rumoured that the Royal troops are about to evacuate the citadel of Messina.

Hostilities are suspended.

Napoleon's letter to the French Ambassador to London, dated 25th July, is published. He says:—Since the peace of Villa Franca I have but one thought and one object, and that is to inaugurate a new era of peace, and to live on the best terms with my neighbors, and especially with England. I had reconquered Savoy, and the extraordinary addition to Piedmont alone caused me to assume the desire to see reunited to France a province essentially French, but it will be objected, that you wish for peace, but you increase immoderately the military forces of France. I deny the fact in every sense that my army and fleet have in them anything of a threatening character. My steam Navy is even far from being equal to our requirements, and the number of steamers do not near equal that of sailing ships thought necessary in the time of Louis Phillippe. I have 400,000 men under arms, but deduct from this amount 61,000 in Algeria, 6,000 at Rome, 8,000 in China, 20,000 gen d'armes, the sick and new conscripts, and you will see my regiments are of smaller effective strength than during the preceding reign. The only addition to the army but has been the creation of the Imperial Guard. Moreover, while wishing peace, I desire also to organize the forces of the country on the best possible footing, for if foreigners have only seen the bright side of the last war, I, close at hand, have witnessed the defects and wish to remedy them. Having said thus much, I have since Villafranca, neither done nor even thought anything which could alarm any one. When Lavalette started for Constantinople the instructions which I gave him were confined to this, "use every effort to maintain the status quo." The interest of France is that Turkey should live as long as possible.

Napoleon then touches on Syrian affairs, saying that his first thought in the matter was to come to an understanding with England, and asks what other interests than that of humanity could induce him to send troops to that country. He says that the interior organization of France, and to increase her resources, are fields vast enough for his ambition, and sufficient to satisfy it. It was difficult, he says, for me to come to an understanding with England on the subject of Central Italy, because I was bound by the peace of Villafranca. As to Southern Italy I am free from engagements. I ask nothing better than concert with England, on this point or on others. In Heaven's name, let the eminent men at the head of the English Government lay aside petty jealousies. Let us understand one another in good faith, like honest men, as we are, and not like thieves who desire to cheat each other. To sum up, this is my innermost thought, I desire Italy should maintain peace, no matter how; but without foreign intervention, and that my troops should be able to quit Rome without compromising the security of the Pope. I should much wish not to be obliged to undertake the Syrian expedition, and, in no case, not to undertake it alone; because it will be a great expense; secondly, because I fear this intervention may involve the Eastern question; but, on the other hand, I do not see how to resist public opinion in my country, which will never understand how one can leave unpunished, not only the massacre of Christians, but the burning our Consulates, the insult to our flag, and the pillaged monasteries which were under our protection.

The London Times, while evidently distrusting the Emperor, is glad of any occasion which has elicited a profession of such friendly sentiments, and trusts they foreshadow a policy under which we may enjoy peace, without being compelled longer to support all the burdens of war.

Rev. Mr. Graham, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission at Damascus, was murdered in the open street. He had a guard of Turkish soldiers, but they did nothing towards defending him.

The Leander, a new Galway steamer, made the trip from Southampton to Queenstown in 25 hours.

The appearance of the French wheat crop has much improved, and prices were lower at Paris.

Messrs. Murdock & Son, extensive tanners, of Perth had suspended.

Genoa, July 31st.—Advices from Damascus are to the 19th July. Three thousand Christians had taken refuge in the citadel occupied by the Algerine under Abdel Kader. The town is in the power of murderous fanatics, to the number of 3,000. The Turkish garrison of 500 men disbanded, had driven the Christians into the flames of burning buildings. The same accounts compute the number of victims at three thousand, two hundred, but the statements are not yet complete.

The Pope's Nuncio left Paris on the 30th ult. for Rome, on the probability of a meeting this month between the King and Napoleon.

A letter from Milan states that some Hungarian soldiers having obtained ball cartridges, fired into a corps of Chasseurs noted for loyalty to the Emperor. One sergeant was killed. Several of the Hungarian officers afterwards deserted.

THE "LONDON TIMES" ON THE EMPEROR'S LETTER.

The Emperor's letter, which will be found in another column, will be read with interests by all, with satisfaction by those who can forget the logic of facts. The style is the full Roman hand familiar to the man who has won an empire, who has now annexed two provinces, and is master of a hundred legions. With the argument of success, nothing is so easy as self-justification. It must be observed, however, that it is no excuse for the annexation of Savoy and Nice that it was conditional on Tuscany and the Duchies declaring for Piedmont. A steam navy may be far above the real wants of a nation, and yet be far short of the previous number of sailing vessels. France may have only 400,000 men actually "under arms;" but when, for our own security, we measure men against men, it is necessary to take into account the immense addition he can make with a single fortnight's notice.

But why are all these topics to be brought up, when we are only invited to a common policy in the affairs of Southern Italy and the East? Certainly, there is a case for interference of some sort in Syria; and as neither the British Parliament nor the British Press have given the least countenance to the suspicions and rumors which are current respecting the origin of the civil war, the prejudice against which the Emperor seems to defend himself can only arise from the actual operations of French diplomacy in the East. They may or may not have contributed to the present deplorable results and the consequent appeal for European intervention; but English statesmen and writers have expressed no opinion on that question. We are, however, glad of any occasion which has elicited the profession of such friendly sentiments, and trust that they may foreshadow a policy under which we may enjoy peace without being compelled any longer to support the burdens of war.

BY THE ANGLO-SAXON.

New York, Aug. 14.

The steamship Anglo-Saxon has arrived at Further Point, with two days later news from Europe; but owing to the bad working of the wires, we have not received a word of her news up to the present time.

The porter of the Greenwich Street Savings Bank was robbed to-day of $5,000, in bills, on the Greenwich Bank. The robber is unknown.

One hundred and seventy berths have thus far been engaged on Board the Great Eastern for Halifax and England.

Mary Liven, a young servant girl, has been arrested at Rye, charged with being accessory to the death of Archibald Nichols, whose hand she had rejected. She was last seen in a boat on the Sound, in pursuit of another boat, in which were Mary and Jos. Chatham, and cries of murder are said to have been heard. She declared her innocence, and answered the questions put to her in a candid manner.

Nichols' body has been recovered in an advanced state of decomposition, and it is impossible to say whether it bore marks of violence or not. Her friends think he was intoxicated, and fell overboard.

A desperate encounter occured in the Five Points to-day, between John Kablinski and Mitchell Pomp, in which the latter had the temporal artery partially severed with a razor.

William J. Coit was severely stabbed last night, at 200 Henry Stret, by Richard Holbrook, with whom and his wife Coit had had a quarrel.

ARRIVAL OF THE SANTA FE MIAL.

Independence, Aug. 13.

The Santa Fe mail arrived to-day. By it we have information that the troops at Hatch's Ranche, under command of Lieutenant Frank, had had a skirmish with seventy-five Camanche Indians, who were on a stealing expedition. Two were killed and several wounded. Shortly after this, the herds of Montira were surrounded and driven off, and other depredations committed.

Everything indicates a general Indian war, and the Indian tribes will soon be compelled to take part. They are becoming so bold now as to attack the trains.

Harper had one hundred and thirteen head of cattle run of in daylight, and is now left to work his way with two yoke of cattle to the waggon.

Two soldiers were followed into the camp on the Pawnee Fork, a few days since.

The troops under Major Sedgwick are attending to follow the Indians to the best of their ability, but the red dogs are too wary for them.

Bents Fort at last dates was then stoned. So great was the apprehension of an attack, that the sixteen Indian prisoners recently sent there were released.

Unless the mail parties are strengthened, we fear they will not get through safely in time to come.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice,
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,
Consumption,	Scrofula, or Kings' Evil
Debility,	Sore Throats,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Dysentery,	Secondary Symptoms,
Erysipelas,	Tic-Douloureux,
Female Irregularities,	Tumours,
Fevers of all kinds,	Ulcers,
Fits,	Venereal Affections,
Gout,	Worms of all kinds,
Head-ache,	Weakness from whatever cause,
Indigestion,	&c., &c.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Sold at the Establishment of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

Agricultural.

THE THRIFTLESS FARMER.

The thriftless farmer provides no shelter for his cattle during the inclemency of the winter, but permits them to stand shivering by the side of the fence, or to lie down in the snow, as best suits them.

He throws their fodder on the ground, or in the mud, and not unfrequently in the highway, by which a large portion of it,and all the manure is wasted.

He grazes his meadows in fall and spring by which they are gradually exhausted and finally ruined.

His fences, old and poor, just such as to let his neighbor's cattle break into his field, and teach his own to be unruly and spoil his crops.

He neglects to keep the manure from around the sills of his barn—if he has one—by which they are prematurely rotted, and his barn destroyed.

He tills or skims over the surface of his land until it is exhausted, but never thinks it worth while to manure or clover it. For the first he has no time, and for the last he "is not able."

He has a place for nothing, and nothing in its place. He consequently wants a hoe or rake, or a hammer, or an augur, but knows not where to find them, and thus looses much time.

He loiters away stormy days and evenings, when he should be repairing his utensils or improving his mind by reading useful books or newspapers.

He spends much time in town, at the corner of the street, or in the "rum holes," complaining of hard times, and goes home in the evening "pretty well tore."

He has no shed for his fire-wood; consequently his wife is out of humor, and his meals out of season.

He plants a few fruit-trees, and his cattle forthwith destroy them. He "has no luck in raising fruit."

One half of the little he raises is destroyed by his own or neighbor's cattle.

His plow, harrow, and other implements lie all winter in the field where last used; and just as he is getting in a hurry, the next season, his plow breaks because it was not housed and properly cared for.

Somebody's hogs break in and destroy his garden, because he has not stopped a hole in the fence that he had been intending to stop for a week.

He is often in a great hurry, but will stop and talk as long as he can find any one to talk with.

He has, of course, but little money, and when he must raise some to pay his taxes, etc., he raises it at a great sacrifice, in some way or other, by paying an enormous shave, or by selling his scanty crop when prices are low.

He is a year behind, instead of being a year ahead of his business—and always will be.

When he pays a debt it is at the end of an execution; consequently his credit is at a low ebb.

He buys entirely on credit, and merchants and all others with whom he deals charge him twice or thrice the profit they charge prompt paymasters, and are unwilling to sell him goods at any cost. He has to beg and promise, and promise and beg, to get them on any terms. The merchants dread to see his wife come into their stores, and the poor woman feels depressed and degraded.

The smoke begins to come out of his chimney late of a winter's morning, while his cattle are suffering for their morning's feed.

Manure lies in heaps in his stable, his horses are rough and unearried, and his harness trod under their feet.

His bars and gates are broken, his buildings unpainted, and the boards and shingles falling off—he has no time to replace them—the glass is out of the windows, and the holes stopped with rags and old hats.

He is a great borrower of thrifty neighbors' implements, but never returns the borrowed article, and when it is sent for it can't be found.

He is in person a great sloven, and never attends public worship; or if he does occasionally do so, he comes sneaking in when service is half over.

He neglects his accounts, and when his neighbor calls to settle with him he has something else to attend to.

Take him all in all, he is a poor farmer, a poor husband, a poor father, a poor neighbor, and a poor Christian.

TOMATO CATSUP.

As the time is at hand for enjoying this favorite sauce, the following is a very good receipt for preparing it for future table use: To a half bushel of skinned tomatoes, add one quart of good vinegar, one pound of salt, a quarter of a pound of black pepper, two ounces of African cayenne, a quarter of a pound of allspice, six good onions, one ounce of cloves, and two pounds of brown sugar. Boil this mass for three hours, constantly stirring it to keep it from burning. When cool, strain it through a fine sieve or coarse cloth, and bottle it for use. Many persons omit the vinegar in this preparation.

REMOVING GREASE, SPOTS, STAINS &c.

For removing grease spots without injury to the colors, take the yolk of an egg, and apply a little of it to the spots, then place over it a piece of white linen, and wet with boiling water. Rub the linen with the hand and repeat the process three or four times, at each time applying fresh boiling water. To take stains out of mahogany, spirits of salts, six parts; salts of lemons, one part; mix, then drop a little on the spots, and rub them till they disappear.

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely "for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer, by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate."

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire, after the most careful scrutiny to maintain, but to enlarge as business and localities enabled by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men who know your requirements, whose sympathies are with you, and to whose custody your interests may safely be confided.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, degrades the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must incorporate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as Eruptive and Skin Diseases, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Blains and Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Rheumatism, Syphilitic and Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Debility, and, indeed, all Complaints arising from Vitiated or Impure Blood. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is tormented with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy as cheap as simple and invigorating.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many insidious and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures in his vicinity, for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Secretion of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored to health and even from the verge of the tomb by its use. When colds, settled on the lungs, relaxation and even fatal diseases of the lungs by its use. When colds, settled on the lungs, relaxation and even fatal diseases of the lungs by its use. When other remedies, and others in whose cases no other remedies could reach the disease, have been completely cured by the use of this Pectoral, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate to what remedy to employ for the relief of themselves and families when attacked by pulmonary organs that are hastening to our absolute. While many remedies are palliating those distressing symptoms which, if neglected, fasten the fatal disease upon the vitals, this Pectoral, by its power over the blood, and the vital functions, subdues and expels disease from the system, and the patient finds himself on the highroad to health. Public confidence in this remedy is the result of its cures, and the people have no security against the destroyer but the use of this Pectoral.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they have "some good" to sell, but call for Ayer's, and take no other. They are the best and cheap in the end, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

THE CHEAPEST and most elegant engraving ever published. Dayton & Co.' Magnificent engraving of Thorwalden's Sacrestatues in the Cathedral at Copenhagen, representing Christ and His Apostles!

Has been issued but a few weeks, and orders for it are pouring in by every mail. Although the original models sent to this country in 1853, and exhibited at the Chrystal Palace, were destroyed in that building, the SACRED GROUP, depicted in bold relief in a Splendid Engraving,

Thirty-two inches in length and twenty-four inches in width, copied by permission of the Danish Government from the Copenhagen Statues, still survives, and five scenes of Gospel History are portrayed in the architectural border surrounding the main picture, viz:

John Preaching in the Wilderness.—Jesus Baptized by John—Christ blessing Little Children—The last Supper—The Three Marys at the Sepulchre.

Altogether this is the greatest triumph of art ever witnessed in this country. The Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, the editors of the New York Evangelist, Christian Advocate, Examiner, Herald of Truth, Chronicle, etc., speak in enraptured terms of the work, and recommend its introduction into every family in the land.

The proof sheets were sold for $35 each, but with the view of affording every family an opportunity to possess this enchanting and instructive picture, the proprietors offer it and an elegant Bible, bound in Velvet, with gilt-edged leaves and rich clasps and mountings, for $3.25; the 25 cents being for return postage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES Free of Cost!

Sabbath School Libraries and Sabbath School children can produce this GREAT GOSPEL PICTURE upon such terms as will give their school a Library free of Cost. The picture is in large demand among the members of all Christian Churches. Hundreds of Christian parents anxious to encourage their children in well-doing, and to obtain (for the nominal sum of One Dollar) one of the most sublime engravings of modern sculptures, warmly approve of our scheme, and we confidently expect in supplying the religious public with this unequalled scriptural engraving, to be the means of founding a large number of Sunday School Libraries, and of thus subserving in two ways the cause of gospel truth and moral culture.

SABBATH SCHOOL CLUBS can be formed ordering from 25 copies upward, at our regular price of $1 each copy, and we will forward with the engravings a Library (from the American S. S. Union, or any other source) of Two Books for every engraving. Thus, an order for 5 copies, which could be easily raised in most schools would secure 100 Books, and 100 Engravings would secure 200 Books, and so on.

NEW YORK, May 8, 1860.

The beautifully engraved copy of Thorwalden's "Christ and His Apostles" is well fitted to adorn the walls of any Christian dwelling or Sabbath School Room, and will suggest valuable religious lessons to both young and old.

JOHN W. DICKEN, Proprietor.

THE Premises situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, contain the largest and best Hotel in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the Public throughout has been notified, and great exertions, many improvements in and about the House, have been made to fit it to the wants of the Travelling Community. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION will say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

IS IT ANYBODY'S BUSINESS?

Is it anybody's business if a man should take a drink,
For a thing to smell your breath, to your mouth his nose to cram?
Or, to speak the matter plainer, there is a 'thumb' I know,
A selfish, sordid, smutty "snytch" did this thing not long ago.

Is it anybody's business that it a man think fit to sell,
At a tavern he his way to hount—or if he calls at all,
Is it anybody's business to clap his eye to certain call,
To see what any other body is about to drink.

Is it anybody's business to notice that some may
Has too little of the Hy's but self too much of that?
Or is it anybody's business—(I wish you would it prove)—
To say anybody's drinking, cause they're shewing of a love.

Is it anybody's business thy and night your steps to track,
And to spread about among your friends you're on the drunkard's track,
Is it anybody's business to meddle right or wrong,
In business that unto themselves in no shape doth belong.

Was it anybody's business the damning stone to throw,
At the poor, lost, erring thrall one in the Temple long ago,
If its anybody's business, wrote "The Great one," on the ground
'Tis only his, among you, who sinless can be found!!!

But it seems everybody's business in this age that's so refined,
To show that from the nobility one, they're of a different mind,
That it's everybody's business to every one to prove,
That a falsehood is the doctrine of charity and love.

It's everybody's business in this "Wood'rous age",
'Gainst every other body an unholy war to wage
Of scandal, hatred, malice, hypocrisy and strife
As if everybody's business was to vanquish every other body's life.

The substance of my queries plainly stated comes to this,
Is Whitebyby's business what another's business is?
If it is or if it isn't, I would be glad to know,
For of one thing I am certain there's my business is.

If it is I'll join the rat-tat throng and add the noble part
Of the moaning, canting scandal-mongers who throng the filthy mart,
But if, as I'll take the courage in hand to call each squandrel large
That has true and daily business is to mind his own concerns.

NOBODY.

THE RIBBON LODGE.

BY WILLIAM CARLETON.

The night of a November had set in, or rather advanced so far as nine o'clock, when, towards the angle of a small three cornered field, called Con'r Haudkerchief, in consequence of an old legend connected with it, might be seen moving a number of straggling figures, sometimes in groups of fours and fives; sometimes in twos or threes as the case might be, and not unfrequently did a single straggler advance, and after a few private words, either join the others or proceed alone to a house situated in the angular corner of the field to which we allude. As the district was a remote one, and the night rather dark, stirring, it might be heard in the by-roads, and the sound flushes in the pan soon from the rusty nose of those who, from probable reasons to pull a trigger for the first time. The country, at the period we write of, be it observed, was in a state of comparative tranquility and no such thing as a police force had been heard of or thought in the neighborhood.

At the lower end of a long, level stretch of moor, called the Black Park, two figures approached a kind of gate or pass that opened into it. One of them stood until the other advanced; and in a significant tone asked, who comes there?

"A friend to the guard," was the reply.

"Good countersign," said the other.

"What age are you in?"

"In the age of the Fifth."

"All right, come on boy," said the questioner, having also pronounced the Fifth pleasantly, as the third month in just whatever you are."

They entered on the glacis of opposite ground, which was a natural bowl, one of those over the country, covered on every side with furze, except where a kind of path led through it towards the opposite extremity. The appearance of this natural basin was indeed singularly striking. A dozen fires of peat and furze kindled in the middle of the bowl, and some of various dimensions, threw a strong red glare upon the wild and picturesque features of the place, and the groups of human figures that were moving about it. Many of these were engaged in cooking, others in eating, and a considerable number in drinking. Around the fires were seated parties of from six to a dozen, who, having finished their meal, were discussing the contents of a pot, placed upon the fire between them. There it is seen upon the ground, with its mouth upon a level with the earth, and its bottom supported by a few sticks, or a little straw. In the upper rock, and another figure listening to a man who was reading a paper by the light of a candle. Each of these parties had its separate bottle, and the whole was conducted with the greatest order and regularity. Every man who had to leave a table to attend to the wants, which others, more fortunate than himself, had enjoyed, as if they were whom the spirit of the ballad was directed had been there visible the result of their savage passions. Beside the fire, and near the middle of the house, sat a man, who, by his black stock and military appointments, together with a scar over his brow, that gave him a most repulsive look, was evidently a gentleman, or old soldier. This person was engaged in examining some rusty firearms that had been submitted to his inspection. His self-importance was enhancing, as was also the deferential respect of those, who, with arms in their hands, hemming flints or turning screws, awaited patiently their turn for his opinion of their efficiency. But perhaps the most striking group of all was that in which a thick-necked, bull-headed young fellow, with bloodcoloured hair, a nose of Roman Redhead's—who was himself present—and another beetle browed slip were engaged in drawing for a wager blood one of the school-boy's slates, the view of which and cross beaks. A hardened, cunning old sinner, with murder legibly in his face, held the face half-pence which they wagered in his open hand whilst in the other he clutched a pole, ornamented by at least two-and-twenty heads that had evidently seen some service. The haggard worthy of remark was composed of those persons who very writing threatening notices upon a leaf torn out of a school-boy's copy, which was laid upon what they fiercely termed "a copy board," or piece of plain deal, kept upon the knees, as a substitute for desks, while the boys were writing.—These amusements were connected to while waiting for the Article-bearer, or the Captain,—for such was Bartle Finnegan, who now entered the house, and saluted all present with great cordiality.

"Regad, boys," he said, "our fever guards without is worth any money. I had to pass the sign-word afore I could pass myself, and that's the way it ought to be. But, boys, before we go any further, an' for fear of threatens, I must call the roast. You'll stand in a row roun' the walls, an' then we can make sure that there's no spies among us."

He then called out the roll of those who were members of his Lodge, and having ascertained that all was right, he proceeded immediately to business.

"Roosie Redhead, what's the raison you didn't take the arms from Captain St. Ledger's steward? Sixteen men armed was enough to it, an' you failed?"

"Ay, an' if you had been wid us, and siphen above to the back o' that, you'd fail to. Begorra, Captain dear, it seems that good people is scarce. Look at Micky Mulvihar there, you see his head that cap just side he can play cards well enough, be my fowl he's short of one ear, any how, an' if you could meet wan of the same steward's bullets goin' abroad at night like ourselves for its aisyquiness, it might let you know how he lost it. Bartle, I tell you, a number of us isn't satisfied wid you. You send us out to meet danger, an' you won't come yourself."

"Don't you know, Rooser, that I always go wherever I can, but I'm caged now—fair I don't sleep in a barn, and can't budge, as I used to do."

"Ay, who's tying you to your place, tho'?"

"Roosie Redhead," said Bartle, casting a suspicious and malignant glance at him, "might I take the liberty of axin what you mane by speaking of me in that disparagin' manner? Do you remember your oath? or do you forget that you are bound by it to meet at twelve hours' notice or less, whatever you're called upon. Dhar Christ-mas, of Lhear another word of the kind out o' your lips, down you go on the black list. Begor," he continued, with a wheedling look of good nature, "we'll have no bother afore we start, here, will we, or we'll be late."

"Stage," replied Roosie Redhead, whose face had already become purple with indignation, "Stage, you say, Bartle Finnegan! Arrah, boys, I wonder where is poor Cousin O'Dudthra by this time?"

"Why, then, sure already that's the best of it. Ar' you afeard to go? Sure you're to be married to-morrow, an' you'll have a right to be off for a week, if you like, after the job is done. Come, come, Rooser, you're not afeard, are you?"

"Afeard, Bartle Finnegan! Afeard, indeed! I'll soon show you whether I'm afeard or not. Boys, I'm ready, if you are."

"Hurroo!" shouted the party, "Rooser for ever!"

"Well, then, boys, I'll tell you what it is," said Bartle, "I'm glad to see you so willin' to stand by one another, for I'm sure you'll have need of it. Now, boys, I'll tell you what it is, I'm towld that Squire Ribbon, of Ribbon Lodge, has got notice of our manes, an' manes to be ready for us, so we must be cautious how we proceed

OUR INDIAN HERO.

The splendid capture of Delhi first broke through the long catalogue of disasters which had signalized the outbreak of this insurrection; but it did this more by the troops which it let loose and the terrible consequences of the victory of so important a stronghold.—Nearly the whole of the garrison escaped, with all the artillery which was deemed worth carrying away—for the British besieging force, for lateness is matter to the besieged, were wholly inadequate to blockade every gate.

The decisive point was to Lucknow, whither the Delhi rebels bent their hurrying steps, and which was soon garrisoned by 60,000 of the best troops of Hindostan. On the other side the Greater Contingent, 15,000 strong, in the highest state of discipline and equipment, appeared in Cawnpore, recently delivered by Havelock, from Calpee, which was into the very midst of the mass of mutineers that Lord Clyde set out to march on the 9th November, 1857, to deliver Havelock and the brave garrison of the Residency of Lucknow, then hypothesing the last extremity, and threatened, with all the women and children within its circuit (for walls there were none), with the tragic fate of the prisoners of Cawnpore. The enterprise seemed hopeless; for he had only 5,500 men under his command, of whom not above 1,020 were Europeans, and the enemy some 50,000 strong, entrenched to the rim of Lucknow, abounding with pabulum & food any other in India, every one of which formed a separate fortress, and was garrisoned by a carefully-drilled Sepoy fighting with all the energy of desperation treason and despair of conviction. Yet into this nest of fierceness we gathered and defended did the heroic old man force his way at the head of his heroic followers. The 78th Highlanders and the 5th regiment view with each other in the annals of the Sovereignty, when so desperate was the defence that 2,000 of the garrison fell.—Lord Clyde himself surrounded by his staff, headed the assault of the Shah Nujif Mosque. The fortunes of the day hung upon a thread. But it fought the way was forced open; the beleaguered garrison was delivered, and every man, woman, and child brought safe and sound to the camp in the midst of their thousand foes! and exclaimed Colonel Thet was the decisive struggle for the fate of India—as may be of the Eastern world; for, while Lord Clyde was making head against these desperate odds, and working out this glorious deliverance in front, in rear communications were threatened by a frightful disaster. Windham, who, with 1500 men, had been left at Cawnpore to gun d the bridge over the Ganges, the sole line of communication for the army, impelled by an ardent courage and an too contempt for the enemy, had quitted the fort entrusted to his care commanding the bridge, and advanced into the open to give battle to the Gwalior Contingent.—After gaining in the first instance some success, he encountered a general battle, and sustained a bloody defeat. The British troops were driven back upon Cawnpore, great part of their baggage was taken or burnt, three-fourths of the town was wrested from them, and the tete-de-pont and the bridge itself were in the most imminent danger. Then it was that the admirable generalship and firmness of Clyde appeared in their full lustre. Leaving a force to keep in check the Gwalior army, he fell back with his long convoy of wounded men women, and children from the scene of his triumphs; and when half way back, his troops were startled by the sound of the rebel batteries firing on the fort of Cawnpore. So narrow was the escape, so nice the calculation of time, that when Lord Clyde and himself, accompanying even the horsemen of the rear guard, rode over the bridge of Cawnpore, the last host from the enemy's artillery were already falling on it. Half an hour later the bridge would have been lost, the communication of the army destroyed, and Lord Clyde's army, and with it the whole of the British empire in India, overwhelmed in disaster. But, not less truly than Cæsar, the British have made no dying Veni, vidi, vici. The sight of his grey head, though his troops had not yet come, inspired the garrison with entire confidence. New dispositions were immediately taken; the fort was put in a sufficient posture of defence; and as soon as the wounded women and children had been safely dispatched to Allahabad in safety, but not till then, he sallied out on December 6, and by dispositions as admirable in tactics as his former operations had been in strategy, gained a decisive victory. The enemy were pursued sixteen miles on the road to Calpee and their whole camp and all on that day did the dripping weapons of the British avenger wreak the measure of Cawnpore.—Press.

THE PRINCIPAL OF AN ENGLISH SEMINARY SENTENCED FOR KILLING ONE OF HIS PUPILS.

The London Times in speaking of crime in England, says that the "Summer Assizes in this country have already produced many startling cases, and as the eye glances over the columns, and speeds from crime to crime the tender shudders at the glimpses which ever and anon he obtains of the depths of the depravity of our common nature, and of the fearful amounts of our social misery. Terrible deeds of vengeance committed upon slight provocation are penned against case of such vile lives and good previous conduct. Cruelties will not end motive, and which could only proceed from a savage nature, judging its impulses under the influence of that terrible and daily on hand-to-hand, yet fiendly contest against the whose society has supported, and to whose parents have confided the care of their children."

The particular case to which the Times in the above extract, is that Mr. Hoyle, a middle-aged man of gentlemanly appearance principal of a family school, who was tried at Taunton, week before last, on the charge of killing one of his pupils named Reginald Cromwell Chamberlain, and of a case of ill-by position in society, by the board and instruction of whom Mr. Murphy was to receive £300 per year. It is asserted that the barrister abstract the mental condition of the lad, and attributed his suffering, not to cruelty on the part of the boy's master, and declared it best him into a helpless mental condition. What hold the poor lad we give the report of the Times:—

"The unfortunate young Chamberlain was found dead in his bed. The body was carefully covered over. It had taken his grave upon its breast, and long afterwards, when a search was made for it, over the whole premises, nothing that could be found. The boy had died of disease of the heart, and caused a certificate from the surgeon and immediately buried. At an moment it appeared likely that the whole affair would be hushed up. But suspicious stories of unusual severity and cruelty on the part of the deceased's master began to be whispered about. The parents had since buried upon the boy's grave, Major's name, and Col. Chamberlain's cousin, which contained those that the deceased's master with the view to the Regular court of enquiring the body to pass a regulated investigation, and by getting of the traces of violence which would testify against her husband.

Then came the real investigation. The grave was opened, the coffin was stripped off, and the legs and the arms of the corpse were found to be covered with extravasated blood, "the cellular membranes under the skin of the thighs were reduced to a perfect jelly; in fact, all torn to pieces and lacerated by the blows that had been inflicted." There were two holes in the right leg about the size of a sixpence and an inch deep, which appeared to have been made by inserting a thick wire into the flesh. The appearance was that of a human creature who had been mangled by an infuriated and merciless assailant. All these appearances coincided but too faithfully with what was now let out of the conduct of the schoolmaster.

A servant girl who slept next to the pupil-room heard the boarding and screaming under the latter master inflicting and thrashing." She returned at 10 o'clock, when the torture was going on, and she awoke at 12, and it was the proceedings. Then the cries suddenly ceased, and nothing after was heard during that unquiet night but the ghastly movements of the wife, who was with assistance doing the dreadful "last" of hiding the traces of the tragedy."

The trial resulted in the conviction of Hoyley, who was sentenced to four years' penal servitude.

THE PRINCE'S PROGRAMME.

The following, says the Montreal Gazette, is as far as we have been able to learn the programme of the Prince's further progress in Canada:

Friday, 17th—Ships anchor above Traverse.

Saturday, 18th—He will arrive at Quebec and land between 3 and 4 o'clock, P. M.

The spectacle at the landing will be magnificent. Besides the three ships of the Prince's squadron, Admiral Milne will be there with his ship and can no doubt effect a salute. The salute of one hundred guns, answered by the citadel and batteries of Quebec, will furnish the grandest sight ever perhaps seen in the country capital.

Sunday, 19th—He remains in Quebec.

Monday, 20th—The Prince will visit the Canadian Falls.

Tuesday, 21st—The levee and ball will take place.

Wednesday, 22nd—Visit to Lorette and Falls of Montmorency.

Thursday, 23rd—The steamer "Kingston," with accomodation for 60 persons, has been chartered for the conveyance of His Royal Highness and party, and will be in attendance to convey him from Quebec to Montreal. His Royal Highness is expected to embark at one o'clock, P. M., and will shelter off Three Rivers during the night. The members of the legislature will be conveyed in the steamer "Quebec," and steamboat has been presented from the Trinity House and Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, praying that some of the squadron may proceed to Montreal. The depth of water at the shallowest point in the bits at the lowest summer level is 16 feet.—Experienced pilots have been procured and will be in attendance. It is now understood no pyrotechnic display will be made, but two or three of the smaller vessels of our still come up.

Friday, 24th—Arrival Montreal about 2 P. M.

Arrangements have been made by the Local Committee to meet His Royal Highness with a large number of steamers about 30 miles below the city, and to accompany him to Montreal. The landing, it is presumed, should be at the wharf in front of the market house, where proper arrangements will be made by the Civic Authorities for presenting the address to His Royal Highness. The route suggested by the Joint Committee of the Corporation and the citizens is by St. Paul street to Dalhousie Square—thence along Notre Dame and Great St. James-street—thence up Beaver Hall to St. Catherine street—thence along that street to University street, and thence by Sherbrooke street to the residence of the Commander of the forces.

Saturday, 25th—The Board of Arts and Manufactures (to which a Legislative grant was made, but session have prayed that His Royal Highness would inaugurate the Provincial Exhibition, on the first day after his arrival, and before the ceremony at the Victoria Bridge, and His Royal Highness has graciously given his consent to the arrangement.

The Hudson's Bay Company propose organizing a canoe expedition either at Lachine (8 miles from Montreal,) or above the City of Ottawa, at the Portage between the Chaudiere and Chats Lakes, as may suit the convenience of His Royal Highness.

The time which would be occupied by all the proposed arrangements at Montreal would be as follows:

Saturday, 25th—Opening of the Exhibition, and inauguration ceremony at Victoria Bridge. The Provincial Legislature entertains the Prince at luncheon at the Bridge. Indian games will follow.

Sunday, 26th—His Royal Highness remains in Montreal.

Monday, 27th—His Royal Highness will inspect the Volunteers in the morning, hold a levee in the Court House in the afternoon, and attend the ball in the evening.

Tuesday, 28th—He will embark on the rapids, and witness the canoe expedition at Lachine, and attend the musical festival in the evening.

THANKSGIVING.

For the years past earnest prayer has been offered for good crops in Canada, and for these two years prayer has been heard and answered. For many years previously crops had been at under par good, even the whole, that a fair return for the husbandman's labour was rarely was looked upon as a matter of course, and scarcely more to be specially prayed for, than the rise & of next day's sun. But two years of almost total failure dispelled the delusion, and showed the farmers, eye and the emphatic lesson,—for all suffered—the grumbling and opening and suffering, however industriously, carefully, and scientifically performed, were utterly impotent to secure a harvest without the blessing of God. A third bad year would have produced universal bankruptcy and ruin in the trading classes, and destitution and death among the working classes. All have and felt this, and united in prayer in the spring of last year for a crop, as if they were praying for their lives, which upon, indeed, the case. A good harvest was granted, and the thanksgiving was general and deep. This year, again, there was earnest prayer for the genial summer and for rain, that the one great want might be supplied to recover the country, but rather only served to make the distress of its depressed condition visible. And this prayer has been even more earnestly answered than any one ventured to hope. Rain in profuse and seasonable as a form of greatest abundance, and the Lord has remembered us in our low estate, and has redeemed us from our enemies. Surely our [illegible] should be a country, in acknowledgment and gratitude! Surely our [illegible] should, in public, united manner and formal thanksgiving, express our thankfulness for so signal a mercy.

And in the [illegible] of [illegible] gone out and sown their seed, and [illegible] in the country, and [illegible] in the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

FRANCE.

The Emperor after reviewing the troops destined for Syria, addressed them as follows:

Soldiers! you are about to leave for Syria. France looks with joy the expedition—the sole aim of which is to cause the rights of justice and humanity to triumph. You do not go to make war against a foreign nation, but to assist the Sultan in bringing back the Bedouins, his subjects, who are blinded by the fanaticism of a former century, in that distant land, rich in great reminiscences. Fulfil your duty! Show yourselves worthy children of those who rank gloriously carried into the country the banner of Christ. You do not leave in great numbers, but your courage and prestige will supply this deficiency; because, wherever the French flag is seen to pass, the nations know that a very great cause precedes, and a great people follows.

The Emperor has given $6,000f. in aid of the fugitives from Syria.

The semi-official correspondence is inclined to think the interview between the Emperor and Queen of Spain which has been announced will not take place.

WADDLIN

"As children, we breathe about the commonest boy, revelling in the many colors of the prismatic grass and wild flowers, and in the power of tumbling where we please without hurting ourselves; as small boys, we put one another and the whole school into a roar; as young men, we fall in love with the neighbour's daughter, and think her mother quite antediluvian; as middle-aged men, we are apt to think that the world is going to the dogs, and that we could manage it much better if we had the chance; and as old men, we like nothing so well as a mouthful out of the fair pasture, or, following the reapers, a turn with them on the broadest swathe, by the equinoctial stroke—the next of the unhappy lots lying thickest or easiest for the mower; as big boys we toil ambitiously with the spurs, forks and rakes, or admit into the waggons and receive with open arms the delicious load as it is pitched up from below, and then high or not higher as the pent shrug the long limit of harvests; a year or two later we are strolling there gentlemanly first gentlemanly our neck and Gregory beside with sweet thoughts and soft speeches of which have with the scythe, as the broadest mowers to scythe for their tidiest rake, and willingly pay old footing for the first. Again, we come back, with 'heed' in pocket, and our own children (rabbling above, as we did before them; now tempting with that, and smothering them with the sweet smelling hay-cocks growing and reading, and dozing away the delicious summer evenings. And so shall we not come back to the end, enjoying as grandfathers the lovemaking and the rompings of younger generations yet? Verily, of all our really appreciative moments in a day-day! Did we ever lie fairly back on a haycock and look up into a blue sky, and listen to the sharp sounds, the whetting of scythes and the laughing prattle of women and children, and think and thankful for the world or our brothers? Not we! Or if we have so done, we ought to be ashamed of ourselves, and deserve to be cut out of every party during hay harvest. There is something in the sights and sounds of a hay-field which seemed to touch the very core of one of Lowell's lines in the "Lay of the Scarabee," which ends—

"Earth, and sea, and sky, and nothing else."

It is only [illegible] that so gives utterance.

—Macmillan's Magazine.

The Combe family estate which is the scene of the murder of St. Eustace, and the cause of the hate of Father Francis, were a younger branch of the eldest Erskines of Mar. In this connection it is merely to touch upon the [illegible] end of their line. The Earl of Mar had the misfortune to [illegible] his Pretender note. A peculiarly romantic story resulted from the share which the Combe family took in these local events, with respect to one of their number. When the Chevalier steadily went down, all money and [illegible] being a penniless exile, with no one to lend a helping hand, he did the next best thing—helped himself. Being a skilful draughtsman, and Rome the cradle of all art, he turned that talent to account, and [illegible] in the [illegible] citizen, never more to draw pistol or hold sword for Prince Charlie. He [illegible] whom he educated [illegible] priesthood, and entered regularly on a march at the very foot of the Papal throne. This young Erskine turned out wonderfully clever, with all the rich [illegible] and the perception of an Italian [illegible] a greater man in the church than Beaton before him, who like the celebrated Gonsalvi, was only a [illegible]-cardinal. Although [illegible] Erskine held in the Romish Church, was that of "Auroratæ del Baruli"—devil's advocate. The [illegible] duty assigned to this rather astounding dignity is, that its bearer contests the claims of candidates for canonization. If he can detect [illegible] flaw in their titles to the calendar they cannot go in; and so expert was Erskine that not a single saint was made the whole time he was "Devil's Advocate." During the ministry of Pitt, Cardinal Erskine came to this country on a delicate diplomatic mission, respecting the emancipation of the Irish Catholics, and when ever visited the Combe. A [illegible] of his correspondence is in existence in Fife, and might probably be turned to good and interesting account, for the Cardinal's life, though little known, was replete with incident, and eventful with change. His portrait hangs at Combe House.

A negro in Gloucester, Va., recently took a slave with a stick, then tied his feet together, and threw him head foremost into a hogshead of water. When the negro was taken out he was found to be dead. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of "Died from congestion of the brain."

Poetry.

THE OLD STORY.

Come sit by me, Kate, and tell me
Of what he was talking last night,
When you stood at the gate till the moonbeams
Had quenched all the stars with their light.

You came back with cheeks glowing crimson,
And eyelids glittering with tears,
And a smile, which, half sad, half triumphant,
Still over your sweet mouth appears.

Did he talk of the beauty of summer?
Or praise the wild rose's perfume?
Or speak of our orchards, so rustic,
Where woodbine and jessamine bloom?

"He told me a story?" "Oh! did he?
Well, Kate, dear, tell it to me;
You've almost forgot it? already!
How very much flattered he'd be.

You say that you think I might guess it?
Yes, Katy, the story I know,
'Tis an old tale, yet always a sweet one—
I'm certain that you found it so.

'Twas now in the first days of Adam,
When wandering through Eden's fair bowers,
In Eve's little ear it was whispered,
While she thoughtingly played with the flowers.

You're blushing too, what is the matter?
Why what are you crying about?
Your grandfather told your grandmother
The very same story, no doubt.

Just three little words tell the story,
What thousands of hearts have they thrilled,
How many of joy they have gladdened,
How many with sorrow have filled!

These three little words are "I love you"
You say 'tis the very same tale
You heard there last night by the woodbine,
Beneath the bright moon's silver vale.

Don't say I know nothing about it,
You know very well it is true;
But, Katy, my dear, did you tell him
The same story that he told you?

Ice-Wrecked.

With a fair breeze we sped down Channel, until, on the fourth day, the bluff Land's End was waning in the distance. As it faded from our view, some few tears were shed of the remembrance that it was our last sight of our native land we were leaving for ever, but they were quickly dried in the anticipation of brighter days to come; for we were westward bound, not in search of occupation, but in the chartered ship of our employer, a man of large fortune who was about to establish an immense farm, of which I was to be manager, in one of the far-western districts of Canada; while the other passengers, skilled artizans and laborers, all had suitable engagements.

Our hearts were free from anxiety for the future, and full of cheerfulness and hope, and as we bowled along over old Ocean, there were few evenings when the pleasant echo of music did not float by on the wave as the young people danced and sang beneath the stars, and the joyous shouts and laughter of children mingled with the passing surges. And best and pleasantest of all was the kindly face of Mr. Grant, our principal, as he watched the happiness of those around him.

We had nearly crossed the Atlantic, and were beginning to look eagerly for our first sight of the New World, when a sudden change occurred in the temperature, and the bright days of April were followed by a May cold and cutting almost as winter.—At length we entered the broad estuary of the St. Lawrence, and then the mystery was solved, for its entire surface was checkered with masses of ice; evidently the autumn winter covering of the river above having swept by the current to sea.—Nothing could exceed the beauty of the ice-fields as they flashed and sparkled like gigantic gems in their setting of azure sea. Many were of great size also, like floating islands, and the heaped up blocks upon their summits glistened from a distance like cities of dazzling crystal.

The wind was in our favor, and our good ship sped up the Gulf, threading her way through the channels of the floating icefields, while hour after hour her passengers stood watching with unwearied eyes the splendid scene around them. Eyes when night came, there was the same eager throng of gazers, for those large frozen plains glittered in the moonlight with a strange spectral beauty none of us had ever seen before.

After a time a mists of ice larger than common appeared floating down the stream. Subsequently we learned it was part of the same the spray forms every winter before the falls of Montmorency. On it, some, gleaming palely against the deep-blue sky a couple of spotless sea-birds, rising in terror, and horror, and massive bulks, and enclosed by the most delicate tracery. Every eye was fixed upon it in breathless admiration, as it swept majestically by, and as it passed between us and the sun, for a moment it momentarily disappeared. Suddenly, the stationary thin resembled a screen block, which gleamed out only through all its tracery just enough every one of the thousand and forty beams, before the frequent bar letting through.

Never shall I forget the shrieks of terror that followed, quick as an echo, smote the clouds, as women, with high frozen with fear, clasped their children to their bosoms, believing that the ship had struck upon a rock, and that their last moment was come. A cry from the boy, that it was but a bear from the ice, succeeded these fears, and they stood trembling by, while the lads rose pat down, and the men down around, for the effect to clear us from the huge mass of ice which still hovered the vessel's bow, pressing and grating audibly against her timbers. A consternating and observation of blanks and musings, and the clustering of men's heads, there was a cold eye about collected for and calm within the surrounding desolation, and although enough evening of the subject was brought to a close.

The Prince's Progress.

The Reception at Montreal.

Suppose inclined to be superstitious could find abundant material for painful foreboding in the bad weather which everywhere attended the reception of the Prince of Wales. So long as this was confined to the Lower Ports, whose foggy, weeping weather is proverbial, it created little remark; but when the sky in Canada, which is usually so bright and clear and sunshiny, becomes exceedingly thick and dark, and pours down torrents of rain for days together, and these just the most important reception days at Quebec and Montreal, the first cities of Canada, the coincidence attracts attention. Perhaps such weather is sent at this particular time to say to our population: "You have left God out of your thoughts and plans, and this frustration of them, by means so simple, will remind you of the necessity of seeking, in all things, His guidance and blessing."

On Friday morning the citizens of Montreal and crowds of strangers awoke with high hopes of a great day of enjoyment.—Preparations had been made previously for notes falling due,—newspapers had been so arranged as to let printers enjoy a holiday,—every kind of work was to be suspended except the work of decoration, which was to go on entirely in the morning by such as could not complete it beforehand. All was excitement and hope—when, behold! the rain was pouring down in torrents, and continued so to pour for hours. The streets were swept by little rivers gushing down each side,—newly-made drains submitted, leaving great holes,—the forests of flags which being nailed to their masts had to hang out night and day, fair weather or foul were drooping and dripping; and altogether it became obvious, by a little after midday, that the Reception Procession, set down for the afternoon, could not take place with any degree of comfort or eclat, even though the rain should cease, which did not then appear likely. It was accordingly announced verbally by those in charge of the arrangements, that everything had been postponed for that day, although this intimation reached but a very small portion of the people. A little after one o'clock the rain ceased, and though the weather was still thick, the people turned out in great numbers to see the landing of the Prince, not now to take place. The wharves and streets having a view of them were thronged by perhaps the greatest crowd ever assembled here, and they were rewarded by the sight of the fleet of steamboats, which had gone down to meet the Prince, returning into harbour. So many steamboats were certainly never seen together in our waters.—Each boat, as it drew near, if at all handsome, was pronounced by the expectant multitude to be the "Kingston;" and it was not till the Companies of Volunteers in attendance struck up their music and left the ground, that the people began to suspect some change in the advertised programme.

The landing was postponed till next morning, i. e., the public landing, for the Knowing ones whispered that the Prince went to his residence in a close carriage to return next morning for the public reception.—However this might be the city was left to enjoy peace and quiet on Friday evening, except so far as those in the vicinity of the Ball Room were concerned, who were enlivened by sprightly music till far on in the night.

THE LANDING.

Friday morning broke thick and drizzling but about eight o'clock the rain stated, and the people began to turn out in earnest, to occupy every available window, balcony door-step and gateway in the line of procession. A great crowd also poured down towards the Boucecours Wharf, where the Prince was to land. This wharf presented a very animated appearance, on account of steamboats lying at and near it; the fine triumphal arch and the dense multitude of people occupying every available point for seeing; whilst the "Styx," "Valorous" and "Flying Fish," lying off in the river covered with flags, and with yards manned, added greatly to the effect of the scene.

A little before 10 o'clock, the "Kingston," bearing the Royal Flag, came to the wharf, and the Prince made his public landing, being received by the Mayor, Corporation, and other bodies.

THE PROCESSION.

The line of procession was formed as announced in the programme, and the weather having brightened up, everything went on well, but for the mud in the streets, which must have been something of a new spectacle to His Royal Highness and suite, and which was anything but favorable to the new suits and bright boots of those who walked in the procession. Notwithstanding this drawback, the turn-out was very numerous and highly respectable; and most of our best address were seen trudging through the dirty pools of the street, whilst less public spirited people walked dry-shod on the side-paths. In fact, the depth of a man's loyalty might be pretty accurately gauged by the depth of mud on his boots. The procession preceded, like the European settlers of America, by a long train of Indians, fantifully dressed. Then came guards of soldiers and bands of music, followed by the Prince's carriage, in which he sat bare-headed, gracefully bowing right and left, the admired of all admirers. In the same carriage were the Duke of Newcastle, a hearty looking old gentleman, not unlike Sir Allan McNab, and two other high officials. The Anglican Bishop and Chaplains came in succession as they came after; and the Roman Catholic Bishop and Clergy, in the most antiquated and unseeming carriages imaginable. The Moderator of the Church of Scotland Synod followed, looking in his cocked hat and flowing robes, much grander than the prelates. Then came the most superb person in the whole cavalcade, viz., Mayor Rodier,—our own Rodier—who, for magnificence of costume, made all others look their diminished heads. In passing through Great St. James street, the Prince was greeted with silent respect; but when Mayor Rodier came in full view, the people instinctively cried out, "Hurrah for Rodier!" and small blame to them, for it was a difficult matter for any one to refrain from joining in the cry. After many and varied changes in the moving diorama of the procession, came the Ministers of the Wesleyan, Free Church, Congregational, American, Presbyterian, and other bodies, being the first that met us in the procession. After them the Bar, and we know not what all. In the National Societies the most striking features, as usual, were the kilts and bagpipes. Poor McDonell, Scud Cornwall, with a suit of tartan,—presented to him by Her Most Gracious Majesty—was a conspicuous object of admiration. It was also remarked that one of the Indians carried his own nationality in Canadian with the latest cut,—probably because its consequent ease chose effectly.

The St. John Baptiste Society was specially distinguished by crowds of ecclesiastics of their large numbers and Correspondents. The Irish Protestant Benevolent Society also mustered strong.

The Hibernians in city paraded perhaps in more than their usual force, and to him whose ear has a little more experience. He, however, cannot be to blame for the order of proceedings, which is, we suppose, all arranged for him; but what shall we think of the advisers, who lay out whole nights through Summer to please the dancing portion of the community, and will not spare five minutes to please the temperance portion.

It is, however, to be said to the other side, and the consideration should have due weight, that the Temperance folks were told His Royal Highness would leave at ten precisely for the Indian games, and he did not actually start till five minutes after that hour. The heads of hope should, doubtless, have been on the ground punctually, and but for the interruptions mentioned, they would have been so; but, in any case it appears little or no time was to be allowed for their welcome.

THE INDIAN GAMES.

These came off on Monday forenoon. The Indians, Algonquins and Iroquis, and their opponents, were dressed in the lightest and loosest attire, combining various hues, blue, yellow, &c. The games of Lacrosse were well contested; but the Indians were eventually victorious. The weather was anything but pleasant, and the belt of the company left shortly after the Prince. The Boston Fusileers were on the ground accompanied by their splendid band.

SERENADE TO LADY FRANKLIN.

The Boston Fusiliers, Captain Snows, and the Field Battery of Artillery, Captain Stevenson, and Staff Officers of the Massachusetts Volunteer force, accompanied by the Germania Band, serenaded Lady Franklin, on Friday evening, at the residence of Mr. Hosmer Stephens. After the serenade, ex-Recorder Smith, of New York, who is one of the guests of Mr. Stephens during the festivities, at the request of Lady Franklin, accompanied her to the front and returned thanks for the kindness shown her Ladyship. The remarks as taken by our reporter, were as follows:—"I have the honor of complying with Lady Franklin's request, that I should, on her behalf, return thanks for this touching tribute of respect paid to her this evening. You will pardon me for saying, that in honoring Her Ladyship, we are but responding to the best emotions that animate the human breast. In all ages of the world, history has recorded the heroic deeds of women. Poetry embalms and embellishes their loveliness, devotedness and charms; but it has been reserved for our time to see them all combined in a living model. Our worthy host would have tendered Her Ladyship's thanks for this demonstration of respect to his distinguished guest, did not his official duties as one of the Executive Committee of Citizens to welcome His Royal Highness prevent his attendance on this interesting occasion. You have come to honor one worthy of all honor—one whose name is a household word in this and in all lands where womanly piety, worth, and devotion are appreciated and esteemed; and I am not exaggerating when I say that there is not a lady living whose name is more cherished and whose virtues are more lastingly embalmed in the hearts of the people than those of Lady Franklin. I am telling you more matters of history—we all know the truth of what I have said. But we have to contemplate that heroism and devotion which hopes against facts, and perseveres against hope itself, when that hope is stimulated by woman's love. The theme of woman's devotion, of woman's heroism is one almost inexhaustible; and you may think the present an occasion when it would be appropriate to indulge in it—nay, almost impossible to resist the temptation, with such an incentive for its indulgence. I confess I would like to gratify you and myself by so doing, but should I attempt it, I should be compelled, by way of illustration, so often to speak of her ladyship, that I am indeed, as she is present, to confine myself simply to her request, to again tender you her sincere and cordial thanks." The band then played a choice selection of American melodies at the request of her ladyship, while Adjutant-General Stone, Major Snows, the staff officers, Major Knight, of Providence, and other distinguished gentlemen, were honored with presentation by the American Consul-General. Twelve hearty cheers were given for Lady Franklin, and who then, after thanking them, retired, while the band played the national anthem.

THE SAILOR RESTORED.

It seems that the act of grace by which the Prince marked his visit to Sherbrooke arose from a generous impulse of his own, after hearing Mr. John Filson's story from Mr. Galt. He was not the mere instrument in carrying out an instruction. And the act in favor of an old man, assumes a grateful aspect which it would not otherwise possess. The Montreal Transcript gives the following account of the transaction:—

"One very pleasing episode in the transaction of the day we cannot, however, refrain from recording. At the close of the Levee, which was attended by some hundreds of the Township farmers, and other residents, the following information, regarding an old and much esteemed resident of Sherbrooke, was communicated to His Royal Highness. He was informed—by, we believe, the Hon. Mr. Galt, in whose house the Levee was held—that one of the gentlemen just presented, Mr. John Felton had served, as signal midshipman, on board Nelson's ship, the "Victory," at the battle of Trafalgar; that he had also served at the battle of Copenhagen, and bore on his breast medals bestowed upon him for his gallant conduct in both actions; but that he had, a few years after, when holding the rank of Lieutenant, been officer of the watch on board the "Cariew" sloop of war, when she was wrecked in consequence of it was held by a Court Martial, of Mr. Felton's negligence. He was consequently, dismissed from the service and emigrated to the Eastern Townships, where for upwards of thirty years, by his lively, unassuming deportment and excellent. His Royal Highness, having last an attentive ear to Mr. Galt's statement, turned to the returned shipmate of the immortal Nelson, and in the most gracious and affecting terms, assured him of the gentleness, that he had not forgotten but that rank in the Royal Navy of which he had been deprived by the terms, if not unjust, verdict of the court by which he had been tried. It was a princely act, performed in a princely manner; and we sincerely believe there was not one present on who heard of it, who did not feel as elevated in the Royal Highness as if he had conferred on him the highest honors of his generous kindness and consideration.

DEPARTURE FROM MONTREAL AND ARRIVAL AT OTTAWA.

Ottawa, August 31.

The Prince left Montreal at half-past eight this morning, in a heavy shower of rain, accompanied by the Mayor and Corporation, and escorted through the streets by the Montreal Cavalry, who gave him a parting cheer. His Royal Highness stood on the roof of the train as he departed, bowing repeatedly his last to the assembled crowds in the streets. The bridge was the Victoria was prettily decorated with large flags, and a number of enthusiastic people were gathered together. He went on board the steamer Prince of Wales.

At Two Mountains the Indians all assembled on the shore, in front of the church, rang the bells, fired guns and cheered. A Carillon, where there were a great turn out, two troops of cavalry, &c., he took the cars for Grenville, and then, after witnessing another loyal display, he went on board the Phœnix which was awaiting him and carried him to Ottawa. The day, though showery, was on the whole fine.—There were pleasing demonstrations at various other points along the river, and the Prince enjoyed the beautiful scenery off the mouth of the Gatineau river. About two miles below Ottawa City, an extraordinary reception was proffered. Twelve hundred men, in 150 birch canoes, had gone down the river—their fleet being in the form a letter V, point foremost. A few Indian canoes, with warriors in full dress, and war paint, led the van. The rest belonged to and were manned by lumberers—some in red shirts and white trousers, some in blue, with silver braid—all in uniforms of some kind; but the beauty of the sight consisted not so much in the singularity of the dress, as in the fine appearance of the men themselves. They are good representatives of the 12,000 to 15,000 hardy, sturdy men who can camp out all winter with but one blanket for a covering. They had opened out in two lines, one on each side of the River, as the Prince came along and as he passed they raised a more vigorous cheer than he had yet heard in America, waved their flags, and flourished their paddles. The Prince and his suite were much interested, hastily going up the barricade deck to see.

The Phœnix stayed for a short time as she went by, when the canoes all closed in and reformed the V, the steamer being by the time at the point of it and leading.—Behind us if in the hollow of the letter, were six other river steamboats crowded with passengers. As the glorious aquatic procession passed New Edinburg and up to the city, the enthusiasm became positively wonderful, and the cheering at the landing exceedingly loud. There were not less than 20,000 people on the slopes. The landing was beautifully arranged. There were stands for the people, and that for the Prince and suite were covered with scarlet cloth. The sun just set before he came on shore most splendidly, and the Royal party much enjoyed the extreme beauty of the tints of the sky, but no sooner had he touched the shore and the Mayor began to read his address than it began to rain most violently, and the ceremony was necessarily shorn of its effect. Little girls in white singing the national anthem, were stretched. The Prince had to drive up through the tastefully ornamented town with its surpassingly fair arches, in a close carriage, so that he saw nothing, and a damper was thrown on the spirits of the people.

The Guard of Honor consisted of Capt. Abbott's company of Rifles, Ottawa, and another from Prescott. The salute was fired by Major Turner's (Ottawa) Field Battery, and the Port Hope Cavalry formed the escort.

Fire-works grand! City partially illuminated.

THE PRINCE SUNS A SLIDE.

A novel and exciting incident now occurred. Dismounting, the whole party, including Earl St. Germans, walked along a boom to a crib which was moored at the entrance of the timber slide. A slide, everybody should know, is an inclined plane, with several feet of water rushing over it, forming a water way down which the crib can pass without damage, thus avoiding water falls like the Chaudiere, where they would be broken and the timber injured. A crib consists of sticks of timber of any length, forming a small raft twenty-five feet wide, the longitudinal sticks having pieces across them to tie them, as it were, together. The crib when fairly launched, goes down the slide with great velocity, the water rushing over the forward part and sometimes dashing over the men upon it. On each side of the slide on this occasion were thousands of people, and the numerous bridges which crossed it were alive with human beings. When the Royal crib got under way and shot down past or below them, these people cheered and waved their handkerchiefs, and the most intense excitement prevailed. For although there is really little danger, yet accidents sometimes happen, and in every case the passengers who try this mode of locomotion for the first time have to brace their nerves and clench their lips and stand firm, lest the vibration and the shocks which the crib always receives should make them lose their footing. And when Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, was to undergo this experience, how much greater than usual was the interest taken in the running of the crib. Everything luckily went well both with the Prince's raft and with that which was carrying the leading members of the press immediately following. The whole of both parties were delighted after the rapid descent; the cribs floated into the centre of the bay at the foot of the Chaudiere, and there they found themselves surrounded by a hundred birch canoes, manned by lumberers in scarlet shirts and white trousers. The Prince got into one alone—the rest of his suite and the newspaper writers into others, and all were paddled to a beautiful island in the centre of the lake-like expanse.—There they sat on the grass, or strolled about, or busied themselves with sketching the lovely scenery. The Prince's physician and the Duke's secretary are both accomplished artists.

THE PRINCE AT BROCKVILLE.

Brockville, Monday, Sept. 3.

The Prince arrived here at eight o'clock this evening. He had been expected for several hours, a message having been received to the effect that he had left Gibbs at five o'clock a. m.

The Mayor and Corporation, the Warden and County Council, as also other functionaries, a number of fire companies with the engines, and a crowd of more than thousand people met of course, besides those in the houses, had consequently been waiting, and with much exemplary patience.

In front of the station platform covered with a tapestry carpet had been built, and roofed in with canvas in alternate stripes of pink and blue. The sides of the pavilion then festooned were ornamented with roseates and with evergreens, and with white lower chevaux. There were six triumphal arches, showing of great variety taste, in various parts of the town. The first being just below the landing, the last just above the passenger wharf.

It will be seen that preparations had also been made for an illumination; for it was dark when the train which bore the Prince's coach into the station. Lanterns and lamps were hung around all the streets and buildings, and the whole city was in a blaze of light. The houses put fire to their fireline, of which there were at least three hundred. The inhabitants of the upper stories, and right into the streets, and right into the streets, and right into the streets

LATEST from EUROPE.

AUSTRIA.

Vienna, Aug. 16.—The Great Powers in conformity with the wish of the English Government, have agreed to discontinue all further negotiations for inducing Spain to join the number of the Great Powers.

The committee of twenty-one members of the Reichsrath, acknowledged the justice of the reasons adduced in the memorandum of the Archduke Maximilian against the reduction of the Austrian navy, has unanimously decided that the marine budget may be increased by 1,000,000fl.

NAPLES.

Naples, Aug. 16.—1500 Garibaldians have disembarked in Calabria, and joined 2000 insurgents who had withdrawn to the mountains. The preparations for the defence of Naples are being continued.

Paris, Aug 17.—The Patrie of this evening contains the following dispatch, dated Naples 16th:—Tranquility prevails in the city. Garibaldi is still reconnoitering off the Neapolitan coast. Tranquility still prevails in Calabria and the Abruzzi.

SARDINIA.

The Perseverance states that the friendly attitude of the Prussian Embassy at Turin clearly shows that the interview at Toplitz has not produced any change in the sentiments of Prussia towards Italy.

The Military Gazette of Turin announces that Bologna is now in a state to resist any urge.

ROME.

The Giornale de Roma states the total of St. Peter's Pence which has reached the hands of the Pope from different parts amounts to 5,992,000 francs. It adds that the subscription to the Roman Loan has proved most successful.

ITALY.

The Constitutional publishes a letter from Turin, bearing the signature of M. Grandguillot, which commences as follows: "Italy is now entering the most critical and most decisive period of her regeneration. Henceforth she stakes on a single card either her ruin or her salvation. Engaged as she is in the path upon which she has been thrown by the expedition of Garibaldi, she will, within two months, be either free and completely independent, or Austria will again reign, and the time from Messina to Turin." The letter then details the course of past events and states that the negociations between Naples and Piedmont were unsuccessful, by reason of Garibaldi's refusal to arrest his course, and because the enthusiasm prevailing throughout Italy paralyzed the measures which Piedmont might otherwise have taken to prevent further complications.

THE TWO SICILIES.

A Calabrian has been arrested here.—He has confessed having received money from Count Aquila to assassinate Garibaldi.

EGYPT.

A letter from Alexandria says some Europeans of Cairo, fearing for the safety of that town, the Mussulman population of which exceeds 300,000 souls, the consul of France informed the Viceroy. The latter replied that he would answer for the security of the Europeans, not only at Cairo, but in all Egypt.

It appears certain that we shall not witness in Egypt massacres like those in the other provinces of the Ottoman Empire.

GARIBALDI'S ARMY.

It is now ascertained that the forces of Garibaldi amount to 23,000 men, against whom an opposing force of 32,000 is ready to receive him. The Director is still in the apartment used by the King. Nothing can be more simple or despoiled of all ornament than this apartment. Neither pictures, nor gilding, nor vases, nor statues meet the eye. A small ivory crucifix over the head of the bed is the only ornament which adorns the sleeping room, and the first exclamation uttered by the Garibaldian soldier on entering it was: "It is hardly worth while to be a tyrant to put up with such quarters as these." The Dictator is suffering severely at the present moment from a attack of gout in the arm. This complaint, to which he has been subject for so many years, has been more frequent in its attacks since the fatigues of the campaign have one added to the precarious position which he inherits from his father. The headache, which he wears as another round his neck for the purpose of resting his hand has been adopted by the Garibaldians in general. The difference which has arisen between Alexandre Dumas and the Generals not owing to any annoyance on the part of the latter on account of the tone adopted by the romance writer in the reports sent to the French newspapers. At these Garibaldi merely laughed. The request made by him that Alexandre Dumas would leave the Island Reale was founded on motives of a private nature. The simple habits and abstemious fare of the Dictator suited ill with the epicurean self-indulgent tastes of the French novelist; and Garibaldi, by whom the avoidance of all scandal and evil examples is considered the first rule necessary to insure respect and obedience, expressed his opinion in plain terms upon the matter. Alexandre Dumas then left for Marseilles. It is said that he is about to take up his residence at Genoa, but will not again enter into Sicily.

increase of 171 in the number of schools, and of 58,387 in the number of children attending them. There was also an increase in pupil teachers of 1,200, in certificated teachers of 90, and in students in training of 65. The increase in the number of children upon whom the capitation grant was paid had been 52,119; 247 new school houses had been built, with 178 dwellings for teachers, and 230 schools had been enlarged—altogether affording accomodations for 58,000 children. The estimate for the present year was £796,167, last year it was £836,920, showing a diminution of £38,755 in the amount. The diminution was rather apparent than real—for in the estimate of last year was included the sum of £37,266, made up of the accumulated deficits of the three previous years. Deducting this amount the estimate for the last year was really £761,007, showing an increase for the present year of about £37,000.

SYRIA.

Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, in calling the attention of the House of Lords to the disturbances in Syria, remarked upon the necessity for taking prompt and efficient measures. The despatch of a commissioner to Syria was a sufficient proof that the Government was alive to this necessity, but whether that, nor communications with other Powers would put a stop to the atrocities. If the Turkish Government were not strong enough he for one should not object to see European interference, or even the interference of one particular Power, under the sanction of a treaty. Such a course was no doubt, open to risk. Syria was the key to Egypt, and any extension of the interference might lead to a war between the maritime powers. Then, the Lebanon never had been fully subject to Turkey, and promises had been made to the tribes of that district by the British, that their independence should be secured and Turkish troops should not be admitted within her confines. He placed small reliance on the restrictions the Porte could give, as he had been guilty of the greatest remissness, if not of actual connivance. He hoped that a judicial investigation would be made into the conduct of the authorities, and especially into that of Osman Bey. Turkey had frequently been warned of the results likely to ensue. The great Eastern question had again been brought home to our doors.—As long as Turkey did not put in practice the reforms she had promised, it would be in vain for Foreign Powers to patch up this question, which might at any time involve the country again in war.

Lord Wodehouse said it would be impossible to produce the papers moved for. Their publication would be detrimental to the public interests. The peculiar position of the Syrian population with regard to the Porte, was due to an agreement made between the European Powers and the Porte, after the evacuation of the country by the Egyptian troops in 1840. The Government had that day received a despatch from the Consul at Damascus, giving an account of the atrocities and its origin.

It was difficult to take a dispassionate view of the subject, owing to the sympathy excited by the sufferings of the Christians.—The different European Powers had acted in conjunction on the matter, and the result of their deliberations had been a protocol signed at Paris defining the conditions under which the intervention of an European force ought to take place. This protocol had been signed by three great Powers and the representative of the Porte, and was to the following effect.—"That a force not exceeding 12,000 European troops should be sent to Syria, of which France would immediately furnish 5,000, that the other 6,000 should, in case they were required, be furnished by combination of the Powers as shall be deemed expedient, and that the continuance of European troops in Syria should be limited to six months."

The great Powers also offering their disinterestedness in concluding an arrangement for intervention in Syria and their intention not to seek for exclusive advantages, influence, or privileges. He also stated that steps had been taken by the Porte for the suppression of the disturbances. The different Powers had also determined to send a commission to Syria, and Lord Dufferin had been selected to represent England. He was glad to inform the House that the Governor of Damascus was already in custody, and was to be brought to trial.

Lord Chesterfield dissented from the plans of the Government, and counselled more vigorous proceedings with the effete Government of Turkey.

—It is understood that engagements are being entered into by the Spanish Government for the construction in England of eight first-class war steamers, which are expected to cost little less than £200,000. The Spanish Government are also in the English market for the purchase of several thousand loads of oak timber, the contracts for which stipulate for the deposit of £17,000 caption money.

The head of a celebrated mercantile house in Vienna has recently erected a mausoleum which no one, even of his most intimate friends is allowed to enter. The walls are covered with black velvet, upon which appear the family arms of the proprietor. Up on a platform slightly elevated stands an open coffin, candles of black wax at its four corners. At the foot of the coffin is a silver plate, on which are the name and date of birth of the future occupant of the narrow abode, and a space has been left for the date of his death, and thus he evidently expected within the precincts that gentleman he has completed the record as far as life. Daily he is accompanied by his friends to the door of this tomb; there he leaves them, enters them into the office, lies down in his coffin, and assumes a stated regard to play hospitium remis. Then he goes forth to the world again, dines heartily and converses with a gayety of manner which charms all his guests.

AWFUL CALAMITY!

Worm or Large Leech.—A little girl of Meriothcrland, in the Township of York, has been declining in health for two years, the Doctors far and near were called in but they all pronounced her in the last stages of consumption. Slowly but surely was death approaching the little girl until from the chief Physician what she supposed to be a stick of Candy, and ate nearly all of it without suspecting it to be anything else, but fortunately it was a stick of Dr. McKenzie's Dead Shot Candy, which her father had purchased the day before for his other children, the next day she was relieved of over sixty worms, some of them 10 inches long. Consumption has left and she is now fast gaining her health and strength. How many children are annually dying from the prevalence of worms in the system, (Parents open your eyes to this fact.) One trial of Dr. McKenzie's Dead Shot Worm Candy, will satisfy the most sceptical mind. Price only 7½d sterling, 15 cents per package, or 2s. 6d for 4 cans, for family purposes.—Sold by every Druggist and Medical Dealer in Europe and America.

None genuine without a fac-simile signature of H. E. McKenzie, M. D, Glasgow, on each wrapper. See advertisement in another column.

DR. LIVINGSTONE'S EXPLORATIONS.

A COTTON GROWING COUNTRY.

In the Geological section of the British Association a paper by Doctor Livingstone has been read. In this the Doctor says that:—"In the Upper part of the Lower Shire, in the highlands, and in the valley of the Upper Shire, there is a somewhat numerous population. The people generally live in valleys and in hamlets near them. Each village has its own chief, to whom they owe some sort of allegiance. The paramount chief of one portion of the Upper Shire is a woman. The sites of their villages are selected, for the most part, with judgment and good taste. A stream or spring is near and pleasant shade-trees grow in and around the place. . . . . The upper lip ring of the women gives them a revolting appearance; it is universally worn in the highlands. A puncture is made high up in the lip, and it is gradually enlarged until a pelele can be inserted. Some are very large. One we measured caused the lip to project two inches beyond the tip of the nose; when the lady smiled, the contraction of the muscles elevated it over the eyes. "Why do the women wear these things?" the venerable chief, Chimardi, was asked. Evidently surprised at such a stupid question, he replied, "For beauty! They are the only beautiful things women have; men have beards, women have nose. What kind of a person would she be without the pelele? She would not be a woman at all with a mouth like a man, who has no beard."

"They seemed to be an industrious race. Iron is dug out of the hills, and every village has one or two smelting-houses; and from their own native iron they make excellent hoes, axes, spears, knives, arrow-heads, &c. They make, also, round baskets of various sizes, and earthen pots, which they ornament with plumbago, said to be found in the Hill Country, though we could not learn exactly where, nor in what quantities; the only specimen we obtained was not pure. At every fishing on the flanks of the river Shire men were busy repairing bamas and making large fishing nets from it, and from Chiliasa to the Lake, in every village almost, we saw men cleaning and spinning cotton, while others were weaving it into strong cloth in looms of the simplest construction, all the processes being excessively slow. This is a great cotton-growing country. The cotton is of two kinds—"Foni manga," or foreign cotton and "Tonji cadji," or native cotton. The former is of good quality, with a staple from three-quarters to an inch in length. It is perennial, requiring to be planted only once in 3 years. The native cotton is planted every year in the highlands, is of short staple, and feels more like wool than cotton. Every family appears to own a cotton patch, which is kept clear of weeds and grass. We saw the foreign growing at the Lake and in various places for thirty miles south of it, and about an equal number of miles below the cataracts on the Lower Shire. Although the native cotton requires to be planted annually in the highlands, the people prefer it, because, they say, "It makes the strong cloth." It was remarked to a number of intelligent natives near the Shire lake let, "you should plant plenty of cotton, and perhaps the English will come soon and buy it." "Surely the country is full of cotton," said an elderly man, who was a trader and travelled much. Our own observations confirmed us of the truth of the statement:—Everywhere we saw it. Cotton patches of from two to three acres were seen abreast of the cataracts during the first trip, whilst Lake Tamandoa was discovered, though on his journey, on a different route, none were observed of more than half an acre. They usually contained about a quarter of an acre each. There are extensive tracts on the level plains of both the Lower and Upper Shire, where salt exudes from the soil.—Sea island cotton might grow, well there, as on these the foreign cotton has obtained longer in the staple. The cotton growers here never have their crops cut off by frosts. There are none. Both kinds of cotton require but little labour, none of that severe and killing toil requisite in the United States. The people are great cultivators of the soil, and it repays them well. They grow however in large quantities, preparing ridges for it from three to four feet wide, and about a foot high. They also raise maize, rice, two kinds of millet, beans, sugar-cane, sweet potatoes, yams, ground-nuts, pumpkins, tobacco, and Italian hemp. Near Lake Nyassa we saw indigo seven feet high.

"Large quantities of beer are made. We found whole villages on the spree, and saw the stupid type of drunkenness, the silly sort, and on one occasion the almost-up-to-the-fighting point variety, when a petty chief, with some of the people near, placed himself in front, exclaiming, "I stop this path; you must go back." Had he not got out of the way with greater speed than dignity, an incensed Makololo would have cured him of all desire to try a similar exploit in future. It was remarked by the oldest traveller in the party that he had not seen so much drunkenness during all the years he had spent in Africa. . . . . They have the idea of a Supreme Being, whom they name Pambe, and also of a future state. The Chief Chamerdi said they all knew that they lived again after death. "Sometimes the dead came back again—they appeared to them in dreams, but they never told them where they had gone to." This is an inviting field for benevolent enterprise. There are thousands needing Christian instruction, and here the materials for lawful occupations, and a few healthy country with none of the diseases with which Captains Burton and Speke were tormented and, with the single exception of thirty miles water communication all the way to England. Let but a market be opened for the purchase of their cotton, and they can raise almost any amount of it, and the slave trade will speedily be abolished."

The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor, Being in the circulation, it pervades that whole body, and may exist out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is frequently caused by mercurial disease, bad living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects are [illegible] by depositions from the blood of corrupted glandous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the [illegible] swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from, or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this loathing infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must purify the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food [illegible] Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the [illegible] skill of our times can devise for the [illegible] where prevailing and fatal malady. [illegible] in "impurity of the blood" is frequently the cause of [illegible] in truth, [illegible] is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health cannot exist in a contaminated constitution.

Poetry.

THE DYING MOTHER.

We were weeping round her pillow,
For we knew—dark sin stain'd she!
It was night within our bosoms—
It was night upon the sky.
There were seven of us children,
I the oldest of them all;
So I tried to whisper comfort,
But the blinding tears would fall.

On my knee my little brother
Leaned his aching brow and wept;
And my sister's long black tresses,
O'er my heaving bosom swept.
The shadows of an awful fear
Came o'er me as I trod,
To lay the burden of our grief,
Upon the throne of God.

"Oh, be kind to one another,"
Was my mother's pleading prayer,
As her hand lay like a snow-flake
On the baby's golden hair.
Then a glory bound our foreheads,
Like the glory round a crown;
And in the silent eye of death,
The star of life went down.

Samson Poddle the Lion Tamer.

HIS FIRST APPEARANCE ON ANY STAGE.

The vicissitudes of a showman's life are always interesting, both to himself and the world at large; and however painful for him to experience, yet it is ever pleasant for him to recall and to narrate them. He feels proud, perhaps, that he has had fun enough to survive them. Were the histories of many of the habitues of Florence to be written, what a world of adventure would be revealed!—what a fund of incident would be furnished for the dull brain of an unimaginative story-writer.

Samson Poddle had some experience as a showman, as will presently be seen. Samson was reported to be the strongest young man in Cherryville; and having great muscle with little brain, he was naturally ambitious of a two-fistic reputation; and whenever a circus or a menagerie came to Cherryville, Samson's rowdy feelings were stirred up to a frenzied pitch. He hired to see the show, admired the feats of strength, and the performance of the wild beasts; but his carry was excited, and his desire to raise a row and destroy the canvas was irrepressible; and he often incited and led a gang of ruffians to do mischief upon the showmen, and show, upon Ishmaelites, and the natural enemies of mankind.

In the summer of 18—, when the celebrated "Giant Menagerie of Flash, Grabb & Co." visited Cherryville, Samson Poddle particularly distinguished himself in fomenting discord among the audience, and in ruining the canvas by cutting the "guy ropes," and throwing oil of vitrol upon the mighty tent—and otherwise doing such cowardly mischief as caused it to be predicted that no show would ever dare to come to Cherryville again. Samson, to be sure, got bruised limbs and a checkered face by the operation, but he wore his discolorations as marks of honor, and recounted his struggles with the showmen, long after with great pride and glee.

Having thus made a "lion" of himself, Samson coveted new honors from the Cherryvillians, and arrogated to himself a superiority over the showmen in the art of training animals. He had a one-eyed dog which he taught to stand on his hind legs and stick his tongue out; a short-tailed cat which would jump on his shoulder and eat gingerbread; a horse, whichhewould nod his head at a given signal; a cow which would back down the rails of a fence at his bidding and hens which would perch on his knee and take bread from his big mouth; and so finally, his assured acquaintances advised him to enlist as a showman, and make a fortune.

"You have the nat'ral tack into you Samson, and no mistake," they said to him; "and there is no reason on earth why a Cherryville boy shouldn't have a menagerie of his own in a few years, if he works his cards right."

Samson's self-conceit was highly flattered, and visions of glory in a cage, and innumerable silver quarters crowded upon his soul. He resolved to join a menagerie and take lessons; and early in the spring he repaired to a neighboring city, where the menagerie of Flash, Grabb & Co., had taken up their winter quarters, and announced his desire to the managers of the great show.

At first, the proprietors objected.

"A man must have a natural genius, Mr Poddle," said Flash, "to overcome the ferocity of the animals; and even then, it's ten to one that the animals leave him to prove afore he breaks him in. Now, there's our biggest lion, Old Nero—he's killed seven men since we had him."

Samson was a little startled at the prospect before him; but after inviting the showmen and their friends several times to drink, and easily induced them to accept the polite offer, he felt emboldened to go forward, and declared that "he would succeed or die in the lion's mouth!"

"Good pluck!" said Flash, Grabb, and the rest, with cordiality and vittles, clapping him upon the back; and then Samson invested his means already with the lion stock at home.

"We'll introduce you to Herr Gristleback, our animals trainer," said the managers; "and perhaps he'll agree to put you through a course of private study."

And so they repaired to the show, and Samson was made acquainted with the renowned Gristleback—a brutal man, with a one-eyed eye and a visible profusion of bristly beard.

As soon as Samson made known his intentions, Gristleback eyed him intently, a while—and then smiled grimly. He recognized in the would-be showman the ringleader of the row the year before, and he longed to lay his claws upon him.

"He is trying the strength of his arm on the animals' cages, Herr Gristleback," said the proprietors; "and he wishes to enter the lion's den. Perhaps you will be kind enough to put him through a course of private study."

"Yes," said Gristleback, approvingly; "and I'll put you and me and the animales, we'll see what we can do for you. There is no telling how soon you can learn. You may have to travel for years; or, if the animales take to you, you may be able to perform with them in a few weeks. I've had many scholars. I began them with the smaller animals, and so on up! Some don't never get farther than the monkeys. Some get along on to the cutmeants and cream—some as far as the hyenas and panthers; but it isn't every man that we trust with the lion and the tiger. It don't do for to fraternize with either of these animals—which they are very keen perceivers, and will take advantage of you with great rapidity at the shortest notice. There is a great deal of human natur' into the lion, and likewise also much of the same into the tiger—which I attribute to the extreme largeness of their heads, which gives room for the brain to work and play in. If I had had the advantage of a good college edification I should write a book upon my animales, showing the strange diversification of their principal virtues, habits, customs and propensities, and I should prove how much intellect is lost to the world, owing to their not being brought up tame, like the dog and the hoss is. With their large brain cultivated like yours and mine is, I think they would give many useful hints to the philosophers and other governors of society—owing to their great brains. Some seem to see great store by the elephant, for his intellect. But the elephant has too much awkwardness into him. For real quick scholarship and ambition, I should put the lion and tiger at the head of the class, for good beastly knowledge among tame wild beasts."

Samson listened wonderfully, and bowed with reverence.

"Don't you think it would be safe for me to begin with the lion? I want to be a lion-tamer right off."

The lion-tamer smiled grimly, and told him to come to-morrow and take his first lesson.

"We have a touch lion that will do you to begin with. He don't roar very loud, for he has had the whooping-cough; and he can't scratch much, for he has had the numb-palsy in his claws."

Samson Poddle went away delighted, and passed the intervening time in practising severe looks before a looking-glass, preparatory to eyeing down the weak lion."

The showmen remained, chuckling to himself. He was about to perpetrate a severe practical joke upon Samson Poddle, in revenge for his participation in the riot at Cherryville, the year before.

"This chap is half fool!" muttered he. "He will get lessons from me that he never dreamed on."

It chanced that a large lion belonging to the show had died, a short time before, and his skin had been preserved and stuffed, in grateful token of his past services. Gristleback conferred with its proprietors, and they agreed to his proposal; which resulted in one of the menagerie men removing the stuffing of the lion-skin, and entered it himself, the ruse being sufficiently complete to deceive the unsuspecting Poddle, who was too much alarmed for his own safety to be particularly scrutinizing, when he entered the cage with Gristleback, to receive his first lesson, on the following day.

"He is very old, Poddle, and a little stiff in his joints," said Gristleback; and as I told you before, he has had the numb-palsy in his claws, which will be all in your favor if he's inclined to be any ways rough, as—there! take care!—as he is now. He wants to wrestle!"

The lion reared, as he spoke—and, with a growl, embraced the ambitious Poddle and threw him down, giving him a black eye with his paw, and otherwise using him roughly.

"Give him the whip!" said Gristleback, pretending to be alarmed.

Samson did so and the lion shrank back into a corner. Samson rose, mock out of breath.

"Well done! You are gaining on him!" shouted Gristleback, who now left the cage and joined Flash, Grabb & Co., who were looking on to enjoy the sport.

"Tell him to dance!"

"Dance!" said Samson, applying the whip.

And the lion danced.

"Dance yourself!" said Gristleback.

And the singular couple executed an uncouth sort of waltz.

"Brave!" shouted the spectators.—"Now, at him! Square off and wrestle with him.

Samson did as he was bid, and the lion followed suit, with an occasional weak roar to prove that he was a lion; and after an hour's remarkable recreate, the lion was pronounced to be in a state of complete subjugation; and Samson came forth and received the warm congratulations of the showmen. They pronounced it to be the finest and most wonderful first attempt they had ever seen; and Messrs. Flash, Grabb & Co., at once engaged Samson for the season, to appear alternately with Gristleback.

"I should like to make my first appearance in Cherryville, where I was known," said Samson Poddle, proudly, feeling of his black eye and pounded ribs. And his desire was acceded to.

The travelling troops were commenced, and Cherryville was among the first places on the route. At his own expense, Samson caused flaming announcements to be printed with his name in brilliant colors, as the most extraordinary lion-tamer since Daniel of old; and an immense crowd of Cherryvillians assembled in consequence.

"If you have any very intimate friends" said the manager, "we will give them reserved seats, for themselves, but of course no one else."

Samson, while surveying the various announcements of great wonders to be performed within, was somewhat astonished to find that Gristleback was not to appear with him; but the manager explained that the lion was so much fatigued by his late performance with Samson, that he could not appear again that day. And then the band struck up, and the performance commenced.

THE PROSE OF MATRIMONY.

I suppose there is a medicine of romance to most matrons, and that if it is gathered but any event, it is that of marriage. Most people marry their destinies. There is more or less fortune and fabulous glory resting upon the head of every bride, which the intoxicate husband believes in. Most men and women manufacture perfection in their mates by a happy process of their imaginations, and think merry thoughts. This, of course, wears away. By the time the husband has seen his wife eat heartily of pork and beans and with her hair brizzled, and her oldest dress on, full of the enterprises of everlasting things, he sees that she belongs to the same race as himself. And she, when her husband gets up even in the morning, and forthwith sedately shaves himself with cold water and a dull razor, while his suspenders dangle at his heels, begins to see that man is a very prosaic animal. In other words, there is such a thing as a honeymoon, of longer or shorter duration; and while the moonshine lasts, the radiance of the seventh heaven dimout compares with it. It is a very delicious little delirium—a febrile mental disease, which, like measles, never returns.

When the honeymoon passes away, setting behind dull mountains, or dipping silently into the stormy sea of life, the trying hour of marriage-life has come. Between the parties there are no more illusions.—The feverish desire of possession has gone, vanished into gratification—and all excitement has receded. Then begins, or should begin, the business of adaptation. If they find they do not take one another as they thought they did, they should double their assiduous attentions to one another, and by jealous of everything which tends, in the slightest degree, to separate them. Life is too precious to be thrown away in accent regrets or open differences. And let me say to every one to whom the romance of life has fled, and who are contented in the slightest degree with their conditions and relations, begin this week of reconciliation before you are a day older.

Ransack the attractions of earlier days. Draw your hearts close together. Talk the thing over. Acknowledge your faults to one another, and determine henceforth you will be all in all to each other; and, my word for it, you shall find in your relation the sweetest joy earth has for you. There is no other way for you to do. If you are happy at home, you must be happy abroad; the man or woman who has settled down upon the conviction that he or she is attached for life to an uncongenial yokefellow and that there is no way of escape, has lost life; there is no effort too costly to make, which can restore to its setting, upon the bosom the missing pearl.—Tribune.

CRUELLY SNUBBED.

The following is extracted from the Court Journal:

A distinguished author was recently overtaken in a shower, and took refuge under a portico at West End. A young and beautiful lady, who was at the parlor window, after looking attentively at him for a moment, sent a servant out with an umbrella. The next day the delighted author dressed himself up to his last result of the problem of what was becoming, and as the umbrella was an old one, laid it aside as a souvenir, and, purchasing one of the costliest taste, called on the lady to return her flattering loan. She received the new umbrella evidently without marking the change and after listening with rather curious gravity to the pressing tenderness of the dramatist's acknowledgements, she suddenly comprehended that he was under the impression that she was enamored of him, and forthwith naively explained, as he stood in the way of an expected visit from her intended, who wished to come and see her unobserved, she had sent him the umbrella to get him off her front steps!

TWO IN A BED.

Ned and Charley are two roommates, but they occupied different beds. Ned's sleeping apparatus was so situated that he could get in on either side—that is to say, there were two foresides; which Ned found very convenient.

One night Ned and Charley had been out, and on returning, which he did near morning, both were considerably elevated. However, they walked to their room with an air that seemed to say "not so very drunk after all," and sought long and patiently for matches and a lamp. After knocking the pitcher off the wash-stand, and smashing the looking-glass they gave up the search and went to bed.

Went to bed—yes, that's the word, but owing to the darkness and confusion of their minds, they made a slight mistake. In short, Ned's bed had the honor of receiving the tipsy friends—Charley getting in on one side, and his friend rolling in on the other.

"I say, Ned," cried Charley, touching somebody's calf, "there's a fellow in my bed!"

"Wonderful 'cuteness," exclaimed Ned," during a strange shiver in the neighborhood of his ribs; "there's one in my bed too!"

"Is there, though?" cried Charley. "Let's kick 'em out!"

"Agreed!" said Ned.

And accordingly the two friends began to kick. It lasted about ten minutes and a half, and Ned was screaming on the floor. Charley was left in possession of the bed. He is content with the affair.

"I say Ned," cried Charley.

"What?" echoed Ned mildly.

"I've kicked my fellow out."

"You are luckier than I am," said Ned [illegible]

ACCORDING TO LAW.

The Wisconsin Legislature have formally considered a proposition to abolish all laws for the collection of debts. The memorial for this [illegible] a general wag, as is evinced by the following extract from his speech upon the collection of debts according to law:—

The speaker proceeded to review the present system of collecting debts. It was all a humbug, and a cheat, and matter of inconceivables and shuffling. Lawyers gave advice, in order to obtain a fee and encourage litigation. Judges made blunders and mistakes. He had had much experience in law, and that was rich. [Laughter.] He would give a history of it. The speaker then related how he had purchased a yoke of oxen about fifteen years ago—paid fifty dollars for them—a few days after the son of the man of whom he bought the oxen came to him and said the oxen were his. He insisted on having pay over again and commenced a suit before a justice.—The jury didn't agree. Finally through the blunders of the backwood justice of the peace, the case went against him. He appealed to the Circuit Court in Milwaukee. "There," said he, "I lost again, and said to my lawyer; 'I will give you ten dollars to quote Pennsylvania law to Judge Miller, and have a new trial ordered.'" (Great laughter.) He took the ten dollars and performed the duty. A new trial was then warranted, and venue changed to Walworth county. Judge Irvin was then a Judge. Any man who wanted to gain a cause in his court, had either to go treating with him and let the Judge climb all the pains that was shot, or else put his dog. (Laughter.) I fed the dog with buttered crackers.—(Renewed laughter.) The case was decided in my favor. When I heard the decision I thought to myself the dog had followed the shoat long enough—I turned around and gave him a kick. (Laughter.) The yelp of the dog had hardly subsided ere I heard the Judge say, Mr. Clerk, the judgement is set aside and a new trial granted. (Great laughter.) Mr. Speaker that kick cost me $2000! (Convulsive laughter.) Yet have no doubt when a suit is in a justice's court in the country. There's time spent by jurors and [illegible]s, besides other costs, at least $20, besides the ill feelings and [illegible] between the [illegible] and plaintiff. It would be better all round and pay a game of the dodge to the side of the [illegible] and settle the matter [illegible]

MORE GOOD SENSE.—My sheep are a cross of the different Spanish families, and for the last six years have yielded an average of over six lbs. of wool, well washed, on the back. The last winter I kept 28 in all—14 ewes, 1 buck, and 13 lambs. They raised 18 lambs this spring, and yielded me 170 lbs. of wool, which I sold quite too early at 45 cents per lb. I have sold, since shearing, to the amount of $45, and have 32 l. t. I have ewes which raise a lamb and yield 7½ lbs. of wool.—J. S. Hubbard, Tioga Co., N. Y.

THE LAST OF WIL'M WALKER.

It must be with sincere gratification that intelligent, sober-thinking, conservative men can read the interesting information of Walker's discomfiture by the English warsteamer Icarus. Walker himself is wounded; a considerable number of his late companions in mischief were disabled also; and though the leader is not as yet taken prisoner at last, he has had to move from Truxillo with a miserable remnant of his original force at the mercy of his enemies, who are after him in great strength; and no doubt he will fall an easy prey to an indignant people. His finish will give peace to Central America and the shores of the Mexican Gulf. The various States will have now undisturbed opportunity to regulate their unsettled affairs, and feel safe to take steps in the way of those improvements they so much require, and to accomplish with their lately-increased intimacy with English and American institutions will go far to assist. With a magnificent climate, a most prolific soil, and a geographical position of the mightiest importance, nothing but their own bungling stupidity and ignorant adherence to useless old habits and customs can prevent those Central States assuming, ere long, an influence and consideration not, even as yet dreamed of by their indolent populaces. Walker well knew the value of these regions; and his superior knowledge to that of the people prompted him to master territory and people with the idea of annexation to the United States, as in the annexation, and under their guidance and protection, their immense natural resources would nourish themselves and all with whom they traded; while it gave the Union full and entire possession of the Central American highway to the Pacific Ocean, and the entrance to Panama. But the grand scheme is cooked, for the time at least, and the spell will bring peace to all those engaged, though restoring little profit to Walker's native Government that failed to stop his [illegible] enterprise.

A SERMON SERMON.—Some men can appreciate sermons so wonderfully as not to hear them without consciously. An instance of this was afforded last week at Lowry, several hours. A cup was seen in the water with a string of cotton around it, and a label on the end of it! "Put me, string, on the end of it!" The string was pulled, and sure enough there was the little writer of the label, with a paper, declaring the cause of his having quietly sent with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE WRECK OF THE "LADY ELGIN."

A STRUGGLE FOR LIFE.

STATEMENT OF COLONEL H. W. GUSHNOR.

I went aboard the "Elgin" about 10 o'clock and took a state-room, and went to sleep. The state-room was about 25 or 30 feet from the place where the collision took place. When the collision occurred there was a violent crash, which continued with a kind of ripping sort of noise, continuing some 20 seconds. I went out from the state-room into the cabin, and saw that the barricade deck for the space of ten or fifteen feet, was carried away on the larboard side, and the state-room doors and partitions beneath the place where the roof was torn off, were jammed in. The rain was pouring in through the hole made by the accident. I went back to the state-room and put on my pantaloons, and then went through the entire length of the cabin, where the passengers had collected considerably. The vessel very soon listed over on the larboard side, but the passengers ignorant of the object of listing her over, which was, if possible, to raise the hole above the water, gathered upon crowding over upon the upper side of the cabin. Going through the entire length of the boat, I distinguished some of the passengers, although part of the lights were out. Some of the ladies were about making a little ado, but as a general thing, it was very quiet. I heard some one remark that it was about 2 a. m., when the accident occurred.

I met Mr. Hobby, formerly in charge of the iron-works of the north-western part of the State, and we talked about the probable extent of the damage, and I suggested going down below to ascertain the damage. I went below into the steerage, and found the water breaking over the deck occasionally, and the men were throwing down mattresses, and I ascertained that she was taking water badly. I immediately went back to the upper deck and met Mr. Hobby, and told him we were in a sinking condition, and called his attention to the concussion of the water as it rolled in the hold. This was 25 or 30 minutes after the collision.

We then ran below to the main cabin, and directed the passengers to repair to the barricade deck, which many of them, perhaps 150 or 200 did. We were then requested to crowd aft as far as possible. I had no means of knowing how near the shore we were, and therefore inferred from this command that we were near shore and that it was the expectation of the Captain that we would be driven ashore by the wind. From this time I was near by the Captain at the wheel house, until the boat went down. I observed a signal light still burning upon the larboard side of the boat, and it is my impression upon both sides.—The boat by this time was evidently sinking rapidly. I removed everything from my pockets of any weight that would encumber me at all, having a gold watch, keys, a knife, money &c., and threw them overboard, and had nothing on now but my pantaloons and shirt. I should judge it was from three-fourths of an hour to an hour after the collision took place, and the boat seemingly broke in the centre, while the engine sank through the bottom.

Previous to this, however, and the last time I passed through the cabin, I shook hands with several whom I recognized in the dim light, and bid them good bye, among whom were Frank McCormick and sister and Miss Murphy, who were standing together in the forward cabin, and there were a number of others whom I recognized but cannot recollect now who they were.—I advised them to avoid clinging to each other's limbs, as by so doing they would be apt to sink together, and I told Frank that when he went over he should hang on to the dresses of the ladies in order to save them. They then had nothing to support them in the water. Whether they obtained anything afterwards or not I do not know. That was the last I saw of them. They had those about them were generally calm and self-possessed. There was occasionally a sob or a moan, but no loud demonstration. I then attempted to kick a door off the Captain's state-room, but being barefooted failed, and then went into the same state-room and found nothing but a bureau, from which I took a small drawer for my support.

This brings me to the time when I went upon the barricade deck. As soon as the crash took place, there was a very general outcry, especially female voices. I ran and sprang as far as possible into the lake with the bureau drawer in my hands. I was drawn down a considerable depth by the whirl occasioned by the sinking of the vessel. A moment after rising to the top, and having time to draw a single breath, I was drawn under again, when the drawer was forced from my hands by the action of the water. On coming to the surface the second time, I seized hold of a scantling and small box that were floating around me.—At this time, the lake in my immediate vicinity was covered with the heads of people who had just sprang overboard. On my right, but a few feet distant they were quite numerous. The noise of the breaking up of the decks continued for a few moments, and large masses of it, together with the wheel-house and pilot-house, were visible during the frequent flashes of lightning.

The pilot house was in sight near up for two or three minutes, on which were clinging several men, one of whom I thought to be the Captain, and they were visible by the lightning. The storm raged with great fury with continuous thunder, and almost incessant lightning, and the rain pouring down in torrents. The lightning gave a sort of purple glare to the lake and the human faces that were visible for some distance, and for a few moments at my immediate vicinity, but disappeared rapidly. The first scenes of struggling or drowning seemed to be followed by convulsive struggles and sharp shrieks, as they threw up their hands and sank.

I called out to them near me to know who they were, and several answered, but I only recognized the voice of Mr. Kibby, whom I had spoken to with others to keep cool and not waste their strength. Some one asked me what I thought the chances were, and I told them I thought it would be good, if we only could keep our strength. I became separated from them ever me, a large portion of whom I should judge sank in the space of 20 minutes or half an hour. Shortly I heard a lad, apparently from his voice, 16 or 18 years of age, shrieking for help, and cried him to keep still and I thought it would be all right, and to be careful to keep his head above water. I kept near him, and could occasionally see him during the flashes of lightning, for half or three quarters of an hour. We talked together from time to time, and I tried to encourage him that daylight would soon come, and we should be picked up by some passing boat. At last I heard him struggling, and calling for help, and I cried out to him, to endeavor to sustain himself and keep cool.

[illegible] I heard the breakers on the rock ran ahead of the boat, and I thought I could see the [illegible] reef of the storm. I gave up all hope of ever reaching the shore, and made up my mind to die. I then commenced to think of my past life, and the many errors I had committed, and thought that if I could live my life over again I would live it differently, and I resolved that if I ever got out of this scrape I would live a different life. I thought of my family, and the anxiety they would feel on account of my absence, and the many sleepless nights they would pass, and I thought of my business, and the many things I had left undone, and the many things I had done that I should not have done, and I thought of my God, and my Saviour, and my prayers, and I prayed to God to forgive me my sins, and to receive me into heaven, and I thought of my wife and children, and I prayed to God to bless them, and to protect them, and to provide for them, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of my brothers and sisters, and my father and mother, and I prayed to God to bless them, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of my friends, and I prayed to God to bless them, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of my enemies, and I prayed to God to forgive them their sins, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of the whole human family, and I prayed to God to forgive them their sins, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of the heathen, and I prayed to God to forgive them their sins, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of the whole world, and I prayed to God to forgive them their sins, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of the whole universe, and I prayed to God to forgive them their sins, and to receive them into heaven, and I thought of the whole creation

...sent of this deficiency are well known and need not now be noticed. Then again the "School rate" has always been estimated upon the whole amount of the assessed value of the Town, but when collected has always fallen considerably short owing to the Catholics, as supporters of their own School, being exempt from the tax. Neither of these results have ever been taken into account heretofore in making the estimates for the yearly rate, and there always has been, in consequence, as already noticed, a considerable deficiency in the general income.

This deficiency your Committee have thought it expedient to endeavor to rectify this year, and have found it necessary, in your interest, to add to the estimates the sum of $500 to make up for these deficiencies, the effect of which will be it is hoped that the amount which it is expected will be realized from all sources of income for the year will be made available, and will be sufficient to meet the year's expenditure.—And your Committee while upon this subject would again urge upon the Council the necessity of confining the year's transactions within the year, and leaving the Financial affairs of the Town all square and clear at the close of their term of office.

Your Committee would also take this opportunity of recommending that as soon as the Collector's Roll be handed over to the collector a day certain be appointed for the last return, and the Collector be formally notified that he will be required without fail to make the final return of his roll within the time appointed.

The Municipal Loan Fund, 5s in the £, forms a large item in the taxes to be collected for the year. Your Committee, upon examining the statute providing for this rate, and taking into account the very stringent and peremptory provisions for enforcing the imposing and collecting thereof, cannot see that the collection of the rate can be omitted. They had at one time, from representations made to them (as was supposed at the time) on behalf of Mr. Forster that a payment would be made by him on account of arrears of rent due by him for the Millbrook Brest of the Port Hope Railway, sufficient to cover the amount required on the Municipal Loan Fund account, but after considerable negotiation on the subject and some delay in consequence thereof, which was the cause of the year's estimates not having been made out earlier, your Committee have come to the conclusion that they cannot, with certainty, count upon anything from Mr. Fowler except what may be forced from him by compulsory proceedings which are now in progress against him.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
CHAS. CRESSWELL,
IVAN O'BRIENNE,
JAMES EVAN.

The statement referred to shows the following figures:

Total amount to be provided by taxation,.....$14,456 76
Assessed value of the Town.....£19,427
Making the rate for the year 9s. 11d in £.

A By-law to authorize the levying and collecting of rates and assessments for the year 1860, was read a first time.

An account of time from men employed in cleaning Streets, for the Prince's Reception, was handed in and referred to the Finance Committee.

Moved by Mr. Towle, seconded by Mr. Wayte,—That the Chairman of the Committee on Streets and Bridges be instructed to call on Mr. Fowler or his agent here, within view of ascertaining if he will comply with the conditions of the By-law by virtue of which he occupies Bathurst street in the Town, and report at next meeting.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till Monday night, 24th inst.

THE ROWDY NUISANCE.

Mr. Editor:—I beg of you, in the name of many unprotected females in Peterboro, to use your influence in causing the Mayor, or Chief Constable, or whoever else's business it is, to disperse the crowds of loafers who gather on the street corners every Sunday evening, and insult every person passing home from Church. It is too bad that decent females cannot walk home alone for four of those rufians, and when the company of a gentleman is no protection, for the insults sometimes then are worse than before. If the young men of Peterboro had half the courage of the young women they would put an end to this nuisance in a way that we might never hear a repitition of it. This is not the first complaint I am sure you have heard about this same annoyance, and for the credit of the Town and its respectable inhabitants let it be at once put down.

Yours very respectfully,
AMARONIA.

Peterboro, Sept. 18, 1860.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I beg through you to thank the Editor of the Review for the Report of the last meeting of the Board of School Trustees. It would appear that at a previous meeting a resolution had passed depriving Mr. McClure as head master of the School; that at the last meeting five members dissented, and sent in a memorial to the Board, setting forth their confidence in the ability and diligence of the Principal, complaining of the rash and arbitrary act of the Board in so summarily dispensing with his services, and begging the Board to reconsider the resolution, and appoint the Grammar School Trustees a Committee to enquire into the alleged complaint against Mr. McClure, and report thereon to the Board. The memorial was received, and on a motion, hereby put for the Grammar School Trustees being appointed as investigating Committee it was lost on a division, three voting yea and seven nay. A resolution was subsequently carried appointing a committee to receive and consider applications for head master. The Committee are Messrs. Ferguson, Cameron and Hall.

It would appear from the record that there is nothing but unanimity in the Board, and without any desire to interfere, or to say who are in the right or the wrong, I only think we think that we had a great interest in the matters under consideration by the Board. The removal of our teacher and the introduction of a teacher are important matters, and I trust in the absence proposed the sparkling members of the Board have been influenced by proper motives in dismissing the Principal. Rumor has it that on admission was taken of the absence of certain members from the Board to pass the resolution by Stratagem. Everything of the kind should be done above board; bribing body or thing improper duty to perform, and on the following night permit them from spending what they will, or any other way or manner to influence them to misconduct any of the duties of citizens or good Trustees.

Waiting to see the Reports of all Boards duly,

SCHOOL AFFAIRS IN AND OUT OF PETERBOROUGH.

MR. EDITOR,—This is truly an age of progress. Everything is moving ahead at railway speed. Illustrative of this I observed an article in the Review, during the month of August, and headed "The Union School," in which Mr. Edmison brings before the public sundry observations connected with studies pursued in said school. In said paper he lays down a standard which every scholar has to attain before passing from one division to another, and which, I observed to, a scholar may remain in any one of the divisions for nearly a life-time before he could come up to Mr. Edmison's standard, and therefore to attempt it is sheer nonsense; and if it is not to be acted up to, why publish it? or is it to deter parents from sending their children to the school. I want to learn if this standard has been agreed to by the Trustees, or if it is the thing of the head master only. If it is the work of Mr. Edmison only, it is time for the trustees to see to it, that no alteration in the mode of teaching, or introduction of new books, or altering of the standard to be obtained by the scholars be put in practice till they (the Trustees) approve of the same.

Among the Trustees is there not one to be found who is capable of judging of the attainments necessary for a scholar to have before passing from one division to another? If they are not capable of doing that they should never have accepted office.

The Union School has of late been the theatre of certain queer performances.—Teachers are told that after a certain time their services will not be required, while no proper reason is given for this action. What reasons have a few to not thus without opposing the other trustees. Let the Clique be warned in time; much hem and tyrannical conduct cannot be allowed to go on unchecked.

Truly, Mr. Editor, of all occupations among us, nowhere worse paid than that of a teacher. £100 to a second class teacher in a town is considered a large salary, while in country sections £75 or £80 is considered good pay. It is surely time for trustees to call things by their right names. A move doing same for what they call good pay would be "a miserable pittance." In the age of progress and improvement how low is some man's estimation of the Teacher's office.

A RATE-PAYER.

The Queen goes to Germany on the 24th September.

Napoleon is reported to have assured Parini of his sincere desire to see Italy independent; and when Victor Emmanuel shall be master of Sicily and Naples, he will be strong enough to contend alone against Austria; but, should Austria prove victorious in a conflict, France would not allow her above her victory.

Paris bourse dull and drooping.

It is reported that the Empress will not accompany the Emperor to Algeria.

It is again asserted that Christians had been massacred at Bashoa, and in villages near Jeddah.

An attempt had taken place at Tenedos, and a more serious one is apprehended at Philippopolis.

London Money Market.—The influx of gold to the bank is easy. The approved monthly second returns in Gold, but events in Italy checked the advancing tendency.

The correspondent of the Daily News says that Lamoricière's proclamation imposes on the Sardinian Government the duty of watching the frontiers, and of preparing to cross them too in case it should become necessary. The Government is already collecting in that direction a force of 50,000 men.

SARDINIA.

Sardinia was about to interfere at Naples.

It was reported that General Lamoriere was about to leave for Naples with 30,000 troops, the object being to prevent Naples becoming a prey to anarchy, in view of the fall of the Bourbon dynasty.

All the disposable vessels of the Sardinian navy were to be sent to Naples, and military preparations were issued thereon to Piedmont.

The Sardinian Government was hiring every available transport, and it was said that if a rapid conveyance of so large a force would be found impossible, the Pope would be asked to allow passage through his dominions.

The provinces of Lower Dalmatia had risen in insurrection. Bands of insurgents had united and were marching on Camp Bosco.

There was nothing new as to Garibaldi's movements further than that he was at Montelone.

It was reported from Syria that a French detachment had suffered a reverse at the hands of Druzes in Lebanon.

SIR EDMUND HEAD AND THE PRESBYTERIANS.

It seems that the Governor General has not been over-courteous to the Presbyterians. When the Church of Scotland, through Dr. Muddiman their Moderator, went to present their address to the Prince they were told their address could not be read, but must be presented in closet.—And it was Sir Edmund Head that informed Dr. Muddiman of this decision. Dr. Muddiman very naturally declined to present the address of his Synod at all, until it could be received on the address of other religious bodies had been. We cannot say that we have a great deal of sympathy with the feeling which prompts bodies of religious people to present addresses on such occasions as the present. There never much of a more worldly craving for notice from the great of this earth. There are times, indeed, when it is a religious duty to set before the "powers that be" facts pertaining to the history or condition of a religious people. But it would have much better suited our ideas of such a visit as the Prince is now making to Canada, had he been met by men of all denominations simply as citizens, without the slightest reference to the different religious communions to which they might belong. This course has not been pursued, and some of the evils of a departure from it are already seen. We feel pretty certain that the visit of His Royal Highness to Canada will, as things are managed around him, greatly embitter party feelings. None can fail to see how partially the Catholics have been treated throughout. Their institutions and customs have been recognized and honoured, while something approaching to contempt has been shown to "Dissenters."—The City Fathers of Montreal have, it seems, set an example in this direction; but we leave them to the proper punishment they will receive at the polls next election.

We turn to Sir Edmund Head, who seems to have erupted in some respects the arrogance of his namesake, Sir Francis Bond Head, in his treatment of "Dissenters." We think a little reflection would have taught him the impolicy of insulting at least three-fourths of all the Protestant people of Upper Canada, and the injustice of making distinction between different classes of religionists, where neither the constitution of the country, nor anything else, but his personal preferences recognizes any.—Canada Baptist.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RECALL.—The Globe of Thursday last justly remarks on the Leader's statement, that the Governor General's recall is "the good."—We are sure that ninety-nine out of every hundred of our population will agree with him. It is for the "good" of the country that a man who has lost himself to a party, who has mortified the interests of the country to the Hastings, the Gilpin, and Grand Trunk operators, should be removed. Nor can his connection with the "Double Shuffle ever be forgotten. Should he obtain the object of his ambition—a peerage—we hope he will be installed as Lord Knightshire; anything that we may get rid of him.—Tradesman.

The [illegible] hit upon the Kingston occurrence yet made is the summary that the convicts of the Penitentiary have sent in a petition to the Governor, representing the disagreeable conduct of the press therefrom and conclude by requesting that their "institution" be removed from Kingston to some more orderly locality.—St. Catharines Journal.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with buildings generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

Maud Miller;
OR
THE TALE OF "IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN."

Maud Miller on a Summer's day,
Raked the meadows sweet with hay,
Beneath her torn hat glowed the wealth
Of simple beauty and rustic health.
Singing she wrought in her merry glee,
The mock-bird echoed from its tree;
But when she looked to the far-off town
White from the hill-slope looking down,
Her sweet song died and a vacant rest
And ceaseless longings filled her breast,
A wish that she hardly dared to own
For something better than she had known.

The Judge rode slowly down the lane,
Smoothing his horse's chestnut mane;
He drew his bridle in the shade
Of the apple tree, to greet the maid,
And asked a drink from a stream that flow'd
Through the meadow across the road.
She stooped while the cool stream bubb'd up
And filled for him her small tin cup,
And blushed as she gave it, looking down
At her feet so bare and her tatter'd gown.
"Thanks," said the Judge, "a sweeter draught
From a fairer hand was never quaff'd."
He spoke of the flowers, the grass, the trees,
The singing birds and the humming bees,
And talked of the haying, and wondered whether
The cloud in the west would bring foul weather?
And Maud forgot her briar-torn gown,
Her graceful ankles bare and brown,
And listened while a sweet surprise
Looked from her long-lashed hazel eyes.
At last like one who for delay
Seeks a rain excuse, he rode away.
Maud Miller looked and sighed "Ah, me,
That I the Judge's bride might be;
My father would wear a broadcloth coat
My brother would sail a painted boat,
I'd dress my mother so grand and gay
And the baby would have a new toy each day;
I'd feed the hungry and clothe the poor,
And all would bless me who left our door."
The Judge looked back as he climbed the hill
And he saw Maud Miller standing still,
A face more fair, a form more sweet,
Ne'er had it been his lot to meet,
And her graceful answers and modest air
Show'd her worn and good as she was fair,
"Would she were mine and I to-day
Like her a harvester of hay,
No doubtful balance of rights and wrongs,
No weary lawyers with endless tongues,
But low of cattle and song of birds,
And health, and quiet, and loving words."
Then he thought of his mates, proud and cold,
And his mother vain of her rank and gold;
So closing his heart the Judge rode on
And Maud was left in the fields alone,
But the lawyer's smiled that afternoon
When he hum'd in Court an old love tune;
While the young girl mused beside the well
Till the rain on the unraked clover fell.

He wedded a wife of richest dower,
Who lived for fashion and he for power;
But oft at his marble hearth's bright glow
He watch'd a picture come and go,
And sweet Maud Miller's hazel eyes
Looked out in innocent surprise,
And oft when the wine in his glass was red
He longed for the wayside well instead,
And closing his eyes on his garnished rooms
To dream of meadows and clover blooms,
And the proud man sighed with a secret pain
"Ah, that I were free again,
Free as when I rode that day
Where the hare-footed maiden raked her hay."

She married a man unlearned and poor
And many children played round their door,
And care, and sorrow, and child-birth pain
Wrought its traces on heart and brain,
But oft when the sunset's rose shone hot
And the new-mown hay in the meadow lot,
And the heard the little spring-brook fall
Over the road-side through the wall,
In the shade of the apple-tree again
She saw a rider draw his rein,
And looking down with modest grace
She felt his pleased eyes read her face;
Then her narrow kitchen walls
Would stretch away into stately halls,
Her weary wheel a gold thread turned,
Her tallow candle an asteriod burned;
And for him who sat by the chimney log
Dozing and dreaming o'er pipe and mug
A manly form at her side she saw
And joy was duty and love was law,
And she took up her burden of life again
Only sighing "IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN!"

Alas for maiden! alas for Judge!
The rich reliner, and household drudge;
God pity them both, and pity us all
Who vainly the menace of youth recall.
Of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these "It might have been!"

Ah! well for us all some bright hope lies
Deeply buried from human eyes,
But in the Hereafter angels may
Roll the stone from its grave away.

PARODY.

John Alcohol my Joe, John,
When first we were acquaint,
I had money in my pocket, John,
But now, you know! I haint!
Five cents it all in treating you
Because I loved you so,
But mark how you have treated me,
John Alcohol my Joe!

John Alcohol my Joe, John,
We've been two long together;
You must now take one road, John,
And I will take another.
For we must hobble down, John,
Whatever be our lot,
And it will have to find your bills,
John Alcohol my Joe.

In a bookseller's catalogue lately appeared the following article:—"A Manuscript of Charles I, with a head explicitly executed."

The first of May.

Agnes Wilson was the daughter of an opulent farmer and had been left as the saying is, "well to do" in the world, and who by well matured schemes and fortunate speculations, had become "quite an institution" in the place. He was Justice of the Peace for the neighbourhood, and prided himself to be indeed "a terror to evil doers," while at the same time he was "a praise to them that did well." His daughter Agnes, now budding into womanhood, inherited her father's spirit—kind, generous, and affectionate, and yet possessed of a firmness seldom to be met with in one so young. Vanity formed no part of her composition; her physical and mental accomplishments were of a very high order, yet she was neither a prude, a blue, nor a flirt. Agnes was not a Venus or an Angel, and yet, as you beheld her many acts of goodness, you felt yourself becoming the object of a singular fascination which you could not account for, and but vaguely comprehend. The young man who has wood and won the heart of Agnes is the son of a British officer, or rather of an officer's widow, for Louis never saw his gallant father—Captain Campbell having fallen in India when our hero was but an infant.

Mrs. Campbell, on the death of her husband, took up her residence on Mr. Wilson's estate, and although her beauty, youth, and gentle manner attracted many a gallant to Hawthorne Cottage, her heart was buried with her dear departed husband in that blood stained grave on the banks of the rolling Ganges. Having introduced the young couple, we will now let them tell their own tale.

"And so, Louis, you are still darkly hinting at leaving me. To-day, even you said 'This is the last May dew we shall gather for a long time.' You are surely in jest or teasing me needlessly."

"It is too true, Agnes; we must part for a short time, at least. My uncle is requiring my services as confidential clerk, and you know I am spending my time here very idly indeed. But observe, my engagement will only be for three years, and India is not so far away in these days of steamers and railway trains; besides, if you were purposing getting married, you could send a telegram for me, and I would be happy to assist at the ceremony; and besides ——"

"Louis, this is not a time for jesting.—India! Three years!! Such a time on the sea!!! It must not be. I cannot believe it. What does your mother say, Louis?"

"It is indeed a hard case for poor mother; but she does not wish to disoblige her brother, and yet she knows I must turn myself to something. But I don't wish to speak about, that, for I could not bear to recall the sorrow of our separation."

"Then give up this fearful prospect, dear Louis," exclaimed the gentle creature, as she clasped her long white arms round his manly neck, sobbing as if her heart would break. "Do not break two hearts so cruelly. I have no one now to love since mamma died, and if you are taken from me" — and she pressed her hands on her eyes, as if to banish from her mental vision some frightful phantom.

"Agnes! my own Agnes! try and compose yourself. Heaven knows, were I to consult my own feelings, that I would always be near you; but this must not be. It is useless to deceive you; I start for Liverpool the day after to-morrow, and then immediately sail for India."

Agnes drew herself up, and, looking into his face with a forced calmness, replied, "Be it so, dear Louis, the only beings that I loved are taken from me; surely some mysterious fate appears to hang over me. I will try to subdue my feelings, or perhaps time, which works wonders, may assist me. If it is to come to this, I must reluctantly yield."

"God bless you, dearest. I can now leave you with a light heart. I have had golden dreams of future greatness; and the thought that one day I shall call you my own by a dearer tie than that which now binds us, shall nerve my arm to combat with the many vicissitudes and trials that await us in the great battle of life;" and with one long silent embrace, he disappeared amongst the foliage, and Agnes was now alone.

Poor Agnes! must those heart-strings that beat with such bewildering feelings of delight at the bare mention of her lover's name, now be ruthlessly swept asunder, or lie cold, dormant, and unstrung, until three long weary years shall have weighed their flight.

But the sun has again bathed the mountains of molten gold, and the semi-transparent cloak of evening is again starting itself over the face of nature. When Louis and Agnes meet at the Lovers' Nook, his step is slower, his eye preserve, and his heart full while she tearful and sorrowful, staggered forward to meet him, and fain fainting in his arms; a small parcel slips from her relaxed grasp, which he seizes, and observing the well known address in her loved handwriting, he places it in his bosom, and tries to stanch the crimson stream of blood coursing through that hideous, pallid face. She awakes, but only to a consciousness of her own misery. But what can words do for me to tell of "sudden partings, such as rends the life from out of young hearts, and chilling sighs." Louis clasped her again and again to his throbbing heart, and with one long, wild, convulsive embrace tore himself away. When he gained a secluded spot on the banks of the river, he proceeded to undo that little packet which he so unceremoniously had appropriated, and found a beautiful pocket book and a gemmine portrait of the face of his soul's dearest treasure. Agnes had requested that the portrait should be taken the day that was set apart for their parting, and had presented it to Louis as a token of true remembrance.

We will leave Louis home at our very best once again, to our keeping.

Weekly and daily all the time rolled lazily on, and her dear absent had lost its vermillion tint. The burnin flush and deep drapes each pencilled that astonishing passed heavily on her mind.

Her father, feeling alarmed about her health, suggested a tour through Scotland and a visit to the English lakes, in the hope that that might produce a salutary effect; but little did he know of the gnawing of the heartstrings, which change could not alleviate, nor the most romantic scenery banish from her bosom. She seemed very unwilling to go, but when she saw her refusal gave him pain, she quietly consented, although she would much rather have preferred quietness and solitude to the bustle, noise, and fatigue of travelling.

The day before they intended starting on their travels, Agnes purposed calling on Mrs. Campbell to bid her good-bye for a few months. She accordingly set off for Hawthorne Cottage, and, on entering, found Mrs. Campbell perusing a letter, while the tears were rapidly coming down her cheeks. She would have retired, but on looking around her she saw a packet addressed to herself. Mrs. Campbell handed it to her, which, on opening, she found to be from her own absent Louis; and, as you watched her emotions, not the meanest form flattery of a conceited coxcomb, but the deep, soul-stirring breathing of a heart all her own, you felt how true the poet's remark is—

"Love is of man's life a thing apart;
'Tis woman's whole existence."

Louis wrote in high spirits, looking hopefully forward to the expiry of his exile, and like every ardent lover, busy biggin' castles in the air. The letter ended with—

"Think nae, dear Aggie, that I'll stay awa',
For I'll come and see thee in spite o' them a'."

When Agnes arrived at home, her father observed her heightened colour and happy look, and, taking her in his arms, asked her if she was quite willing to start to-morrow on their journey, and if she had not been fatiguing herself too much by her long walk? She replied, "I am not at all fatigued; I am quite ready to travel; I am so happy, dear papa—so very happy," and she buried her head in his bosom. The old man played mechanically with her raven curls, while his thoughts wandered back to his dear departed wife. A tear-drop gathered in his mild blue eye, and, in a voice husky with emotion, he bade her play a tune on the piano. She took her seat at the instrument, and involuntarily commenced that fine old air, "Logie o' Buchan." Well was it for her that the old man's thoughts were carrying backwards on the wings of memory. Her voice now thrilled sweetly, or rather quivered with suppressed emotion, while she took most unwarrantable liberties with the copyright of the song, such as giving the chorus thus:—

"Then haste ye back, Louis, and bide nae awa',
For ye'll come and see me in spite o' them a'."

And yet she seemed to be unconscious of what she was either saying or doing. But space forbids us entering into details about their tour—suffice it to say that Agnes always seemed happy and cheerful; but whether certain letters, written in a bold, dashing style, on foreign post, with the Indian post-mark, had anything to do with it, we leave the reader to judge. The three years had now nearly expired, and Agnes was seriously looking out for the rover's return, when she saw in the papers the wreck of the Prairie, from Calcutta, and all hands lost. Could it be possible that her Louis was aboard of the ill-fated vessel? It was a fearful thought; and yet she had received no letters from him the last two mails. Wearily did the days pass on, but yet no letters or intelligence, and Agnes's cheek again became pale, her eye strangely brilliant, and her temper quite nervous and irritable, until it wanted only a day of the expiry of the three long years.—She has been attempting to read, but cannot accomplish it; she has turned away from the piano in disgust, its discordant sounds seem to startle her, and her fingers refuse to move over the keys, but seem like breath'd instinct and motionless. The bell has rung, and a servant enters with "a person wishes to see you madam."

"Well, tell him or her to come in."

"He says he can't come in, but if you would speak to him at the door; he appears to be a sailor, and ——"

"That's quite enough; tell him I will be with him instantly."

When she reached the hall door, she saw a man dressed in seaman costume, his features nearly concealed by a huge wide-awake, who asked her if she was Miss Wilson?

She replied, "Yes; what do you want with me?"

He said, "I suppose you saw in the papers an account of the loss of the Prairie, from Calcutta?"

"Yes, yes! go on."

"Well then, one of the ——— was on board—a William Campbell, who ——"

"Was lost when the vessel went down," she exclaimed, frantically speaking him by the arm; "tell me, tell me! This suspense is horrible, my poor dear lost Louis is ——"

"Once more beside his faithful bonie!" exclaimed the gay tempore person, as he threw aside his wide-awake, and showed his glossy curls to clatter over his ready forehead. The fire that caused gathering over her eyes suddenly was withdrawn, and with a wild scream of delight, she threw her arms around her lover's neck, and fell fainting on his bosom.

Louis bore her away to the Lovers' Nook, and when consciousness returned, he began to explain; he had been prevented by severely pressed for a passage in any of the outward bound vessels had been consequently.

"But, dearest, how could you think that I would be so cruel as to leave you without a word? Did you not receive my letter from Calcutta?"

Agnes looked bewildered, and stared on the speaker, as if doubting the evidence of her senses; was this indeed her Louis; was this the same Louis that she had wept for as dead? Was he indeed the cause of all evil?

"True, my most philosophical darling; but in what light do I appear before you but as a penniless adventurer?"

"Not that, not that Louis."

"Very well, then dearest, I have kept my promise; it is three years to-morrow since we parted, and by the bye, this is the 1st of May, and I have to get my May dew." So saying he kissed her pale cheek, with all the gallantry of a lover of the old school.

But I am afraid I have kept you too long out, and your papa will be looking for you. Will you meet me here to-morrow?" and with one parting salute, such as only lovers can appreciate, he disappeared amongst the foliage.

When they met again next day she was surprised at his appearance. Dressed in a light shooting dress, his manly figure and bronzed features came out in bold relief; while he, not seeing her features in the glimmering twilight the night previous, stood for a moment fascinated and spell-bound with her beauty, mentally congratulating himself on the possession of such a priceless pearl.

"Dear Agnes, what a beautiful creature you have grown."

"Come, come Louis, keep such flattering remarks for your Indian belles!"

"Well, I will, dearest, if you particularly wish it; but as I don't intend returning to India unless it be to reclaim the money I lost, your advice is uncalled for."

"And how much money did you say you lost?"

"Why just two thousand pounds; what would have purchased me a junior partnership in my uncle's establishment."

Agnes had been diving mysteriously into a small reticule, and now, fishing up a business-looking paper, handed it quietly over to Louis, who, unfolding it, found it to be a bank bill of the value of three thousand pounds sterling. She answered his look of surprise and astonishment by saying to him, "I got this from papa a few days ago. It was left me by an aunt, in London, and was to be paid on my coming of age."

"But bless your kind unsophisticated heart what in the name of wonder would you give it to me for?"

"Because you said it would assist you in your business," she said, blushing while she spoke, "and it is of no use to me."

"No, no, Agnes, I don't require it. I luckily banked my money in Calcutta, and got a draft on the bank of England, which I got cashed to-day; but this proof of disinterestedness which I sincerely could have dreamed of, proves to me what a jewel I have won."

"Not won yet, Louis," she exclaimed smiling.

"Well then, I am no wooer or flatterer, but I now ask you, are you willing to go through the world with one who will guard you as the greatest treasure, who while reason keeps its seat, will love you with that feeling which a heart like yours deserves and yearns for? Will you dearest?"

A thrilling embrace and gently whispered "Yes!" was the answer; and Louis was in ecstacies.

They were shortly afterwards married, and found the happiness for which they had longed so earnestly. May God ever bless such fond hearts as our earnest wish.

AFRICAN SCENERY.

Dull mangroves, dismal jungle, and monotonous grass, were supplanted by tall, solitary trees, amongst which the lofty tamarind rose conspicuously graceful and a marketable-like swamp cut by a net-work of streams, inlets, and stagnant pools, gave way to dry, healthy slopes, with short, steep pitches and gently-shelving hills.—The beams of the large sun of the equator—and nowhere have I seen the rulers of day and night so large—danced gaily upon blocks and pebbles of red, yellow, and dazzling snowy quartz, and the bright sea breeze moved the summits of the tapes, from which depended grapevine lianas, and wood apples large as melons, whilst creepers, like vine tendrils, rising from large bulbs of brown-gray wood, clung closely to their stalwart trunks. Monkeys played at hide-and-go-seek, chattering behind the boles, as the ignaze, with its pointed scaley armour, issued forth to look upon the noisy bands; white-breasted ravens cawed when disturbed from their perching places, doves cooed on the wall-clothed boughs, and hawks soared high in the transparent sky. The field cricket chirped like the Italian cigala in the shady bush;—and everywhere—from air, from earth, from the hill-slopes above, and from the marshes below—the keen, the heavy, and the most continuous noise of insect life, through the length of the day, speaks out its natural joy. Our gipsy encampment lay

"By shallow rivers to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals."

By night the soothing murmurs of the stream of the land breeze, which met the dews resulting of the breeze, which, at times broken by the scream of the night-heron, the lisher of the bull-frog in the swampy home, the cry-baby of whimper, and fox's whining bark, continued through the silence most musical, most luxuriously. Instead of the cold night rain and the roughing of the blast, the view disclosed a splendid scene, the moonbeams lying like sheets of snow upon the ruddy hillocks, and the stars hanging like lamps of gold from the dome of infinite blue.—Burton's Lake Regions of Central Africa.

THE PERILS OF SCIENCE.

Some years ago a large whale was caught in the Bay of Fundy, and towed up to Lubec, where it was cut up. Professor Agassiz, who was then lecturing in Boston, hearing of the capture, went down to examine the animal. He was accompanied by a number of students, and by a gentleman who had never seen a whale, and who was very anxious to do so. The professor, with his usual kindness, invited him to go down with the party. When they arrived at the wharf, the whale was lying on the beach, and the professor, with his students, was busily engaged in examining the interior. The gentleman, who was very curious, but who had a horror of blood, was standing at a distance, when the professor called to him to come and look down the throat of the whale. He replied that he could see very well where he was standing. The professor insisted, and told him that he could see nothing unless he looked down the throat. The gentleman, thus urged, approached the mouth of the whale, and looked down the throat, when the professor, with a sudden push, pushed him down the throat of the whale, and closed the mouth upon him. The gentleman, finding himself in the mouth of the whale, and in total darkness, began to think that he was in a very unpleasant situation, and that the professor had gone too far with his joke. He began to feel around him, and found that he was in the throat of the whale, and that he could not get out. He then

The Prince's Progress.

THE PRINCE AT HAMILTON.

HAMILTON, Sept. 19.

The Prince commenced his work to-day by going to the Central School, where the Trustees met him with an address. He was conducted by the Principal through the various divisions, where the scholars were all assembled. They sang "God save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," and barrahed for the Prince of Wales.

He next proceeded to the Royal Hotel to hold a Levee, which was numerously attended. Immediately before the general Levee, the Baptist body presented an address and received a reply, and during the Levee an address was handed in from the Hemilton Association—a scientific body. The Prince then went to the Exhibition grounds.

The Exhibition was in every way successful. The entries were more numerous than at any previous show, and the arrangements gave general satisfaction. The Prince's stay was very short.

He next lunched at the City Hotel, where the City Authorities were present.

The next part of the programme was the inauguration of the Water Works, to perform which ceremony the Peerless had been chartered to take the Royal party to the Engine House.

The coachman who drove the Prince's carriage instead of taking them to the wharf, took them to the engine house by land—the consequence was they arrived too soon, and with great good nature waited for the Peerless until the chairman of the Water Commissioners and other officials should learn of the mistake and come along. They went into the engine house with Mr. Keefer to see the huge machines and otherwise whiled away time for at least half an hour.

Finally the proper parties came, an address was presented, and the Prince again went into the engine room to turn the steam on. The handles by which the throttle valves were to be opened were capped with velvet; and after turning on one the Prince went to do the same to the other engine. On his going out a jet of water was made to play at least 100 feet high. He then declared the Works inaugurated.

The party then returned on board the Peerless.

The Warden and Council of the County were to have met the Prince on his landing with an address, but had no opportunity of doing so.

The Governor General showed considerable vexation, and endeavored to throw the blame on the Water Commissioners.

The Duke and Gen. Bruce explained to the gentlemen how the contretemps had been, and exhibited no much kindness and courtesy that the ruffled temper of the Governor was quite restored.

This evening the Prince attends the ball in the building especially erected for the purpose, in rear of the American Hotel, which is very handsomely decorated.

Hamilton, Sept. 20.

The Prince danced at the ball until half-past three this morning; nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of the evening, and the ball, at which about 1,000 persons were present, was in every way a success.

This morning he went to the Exhibition grounds. From 20,000 to 50,000 people were there assembled.

Captain Bull's troop of Cavalry preceded the Prince's carriage, and cleared the road for him. He ascended the platform, and was presented with an address from the Provincial Agricultural Association. Just as this ceremony was being performed it began to rain, and the Royal party enlarged the Exhibition building, which had been cleared for the purpose of allowing them to see the very fine show it contained. It ceased raining, and they went to look at the prize animals arranged in rows, as also the agricultural implements. They then went to lunch at Sir Allan McNab's, and left by train for Windsor.

The Prince's stay at Hamilton has been very pleasant to him. The charming residence appropriated for him and his suite gave them the greatest satisfaction. The people too, who have assembled here more numerously than at any other place, have been in the best of temper. Even the rain to-day hardly dispirited them, and as it was fine yesterday and the day before, they say it is remarkable that the clouds only shed tears as His Royal Highness was leaving.

The following is a reply to the address of the Hamilton City Council to the Prince of Wales:

GENTLEMEN,—This is the last of the very numerous addresses which have flowed in upon me from the Municipal Authorities, as well as other bodies throughout the Queen's dominions in North America, which I have now traversed from East to West, and I can say with truth that it is not the least fervent in its declarations of attachment to the Queen, nor the least earnest in its aspirations for the success and happiness of my future life and its prayers that my career may be one of usefulness to others and of honor to myself.

You cannot doubt the readiness with which I undertook the duty which was entrusted to me by the Queen of visiting in Her name and on Her behalf these possessions of Her Crown.

That task is now nearly completed, and it only remains for me to report to your sovereign, universal enthusiasm, unanimous loyalty, all-pervading patriotism, general contentment, and I trust no less general prosperity and happiness.

I can never forget the scenes I have witnessed. The short time during which I have enjoyed the privilege of associating myself with the Canadian people must ever form a happy epoch in my life. I shall bear away with me a grateful remembrance of kindness and affection which, as yet I have been unable to do anything to merit, and it shall be the constant effort of my future years to prove myself not unworthy of the love and confidence of a generous people.

The Prince left Hamilton shortly after noon, on Friday, and arrived in Detroit same evening at 7.

THE PRINCE AT DETROIT.

Detroit, Sept. 21.

From an early hour this morning the streets in vicinity of the Russell House were densely packed with people, anxious to catch a glimpse of the Prince when he should appear to take his departure for the cars. Just before ten o'clock he made his appearance with two or three of his suite, accompanied by Mayor Buhl, intending to take a drive through the city before proceeding to the cars. A magnificent open barouche, drawn by four white horses, had been provided for the purpose, in which the party seated themselves. The crowd gathered about the carriage and blocked up the avenues, made it impossible for the carriage to proceed. Cheer after cheer was given, and the wildest enthusiasm prevailed. The carriage was followed by immense crowds on foot, many hanging to the wheels, while the streets and side-walks on the route were literally blocked with people, who intercepted the Royal party at every turn. Such a rabble and scene of confusion was never witnessed here before. After driving through a few of the principal streets, followed by the inevitable crowds at every step, the party proceeded to the depot and took their departure for Chicago, amid the firing of cannon and other demonstrations.

THE PRINCE AT CHICAGO.

Chicago, Sept. 21.

Lord Renfrew and suite arrived by the Michigan Central Railroad, at 7.30 this evening, and proceeded to the Richmond House, where they will stop during their visit to Chicago. Notwithstanding the expressed wish of the party, that they should be allowed to arrive in quietness, a large crowd assembled at the depot long before the train arrived. Although but little noise was made, the crowd so blocked the streets that it was with difficulty the carriages containing the party reached the hotel.

The Evening Journal says that in order to gratify ladies and gentlemen who wish to see Lord Renfrew, he, will at some hour to-morrow, to be published in the morning papers, stand on the balcony of the hotel.

The party leaves to-morrow morning by the St. Louis road.

The Richmond House is illuminated this evening in honour of their distinguished guests.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

More than once we have recently alluded to the probability of Hungary becoming soon the theatre of transactions similar to those now taking place in Italy. From the course taken by events in Europe, our mind was made up to see another Magyar insurrection, as the inevitable result of Garibaldi's wonderful success in his native land.—But if this section, on the part of Hungary, was a strong probability a few weeks or months ago, the passing occurrences day after day in Europe now advance the possibility of a revolution to a certainty. And the boons of Hapsburg as well as in Venetia, for assuredly in both will it be seriously assailed. Assailed, and not by ordinary means of ordinary men, for while it will have on Italian ground to defend itself against the brave victorious Italian Liberator, on Hungarian soil it will meet its heart-earnest and perhaps most formidable foe, in the honored person of Louis Kossuth. And with Kossuth on one side, Garibaldi on the other, and insurrection lifting up her cap of liberty even in Vienna and the central territories of Austria, we may soon expect to witness Francis of Hapsburg in as miserable a predicament as now besets his loving ally the despot of Naples. But none need to mourn for their mishaps; they have cared nothing for the people, they have heeded no warnings, the lessons of the past have taught them nothing, and now the world will have no pity on them in their affliction, for their deserved affliction will ensure peace, safety, happiness, to their long-suffering and oppressed subjects. There can and should be no pity for dethroned tyrants, and the day has gone past forever when sympathy may be expected over the downfall of systematized despotism. Rather than regret, the world will rejoice; for the fall of every wrong, and wrongful government, gives wide latitude for freedom, and still higher elevates the long-looked-for reign of glorious right.—Justice, wisdom, honor, and enlightenment have all been trodden under the proud feet of bigotry and insolent misrule; but the time comes when they in turn shall have the sway, and then the world will behold a blessed change. Europe liberated from her galling fetters, and her millions, free to think, to commit,—free in a word, to taste the blessings of constitutional and true representative government. Government, such as we have here, and such as we left with the dear old land at home.

Austria is sinking fast. Internally she is in a sad wretched state; her finances are in the most dilapidated condition conceivable; she proposes loans, and none will take them up. Credit, character, and self-reliance are all gone; she grows daily weaker, and her huge standing army is crushing her to the very earth. When the conflict comes, as come it surely does, the dismemberment of the great Austrian empire is a necessity of fate; for among our expounding allies—allies while in peace—she may look in vain for help. Prussia, indeed is talked of, but Prussia will not risk her liege influence in the German unity to bolster up the rotten interests of the house of Hapsburg, though she does contrive to make a good appearance at Teplitz, in her conference with Francis Joseph, and this we may depend on, that though Austria may lose Venetia, and have to yield in contest with Hungary, or the brotherly love of Prussia will end in diplomatic meaningless phraseology, as for as helping Austria; while her own direct nation will be to keep watch and ward over the important Rhine. Freedom by her wisdom alone, shaken by her own dissentient millions, stupefied by her helpless condition, weakened by the severances from her of Croatia, Sclavonia, Transylvania and Hungary, then will all her past iniquities accumulate about her, and bring upon the devoted house of Hapsburg destruction and desolation, even the inevitable judgment that follows nations when they violate all that is just, merciful and right. For long years, and with a high hand has this proud house carried out its iniquitous purposes; but now the hand withers, its power is fast becoming impotent, the visibility so long hid and characterized by huge sins decays, and, thank Heaven, the true-hearted sympathy of America will soon be numbered among the good and well things that constitute the past.

This is no dream; no shadow of the dreamlit to please the will; but as Hungary on this occasion, and without the wild feeling in favor of nationality and freedom displayed by all parties and classes of the people, [illegible] as the anniversary day of the [illegible] and, St. Stephen, and in the capital of [illegible] Pesth, there was a thorough fraternization among Magyars, Germans, Croatians, Servians, and Sclavonians, and in procession they visited Roman Catholic, Greek, and Protestant churches, exhibiting such a harmony of feeling in behalf of the country and its independence, as [illegible] very seriously startled the Imperial Government at Vienna. But besides all this, the present Governor of Hungary, General Von Benedek, refuses in the excited state of feeling there, to continue longer in his place, and to the consternation of the double-dealing young Emperor, has resigned his important position. And still more, and, if possible, still more emphatic of coming change, is now the patent fact that Kossuth has appeared upon the scene. For long he has been very quiet, and perhaps the thoughtless multitude assumed his day as having gone by, but those who so judged of the hero Magyar little knew the man. His heart is too great, too warm, to neglect or forget his native land; still the darling of his countrymen, the hope of Hungary, and one of the purest patriots on the earth, all this time of seeming quiet, certain may we be, that his heart and brain both have been busy working on behalf of freedom and his country, and now that he has publicly appeared and addressed his loved Hungary, he himself declares in that address that the day of reckoning with Austria has come, and the hour of Hungary's redemption is at hand! God grant it may, is our heart's desire.—Scottish American.

DREADFUL SUFFERINGS OF A SHIP'S CREW.

The only survivor of the crew of the barque Kitty, of Newcastle, named William Armstrong, has just arrived at Galway. In 1859, he and others sailed from Newcastle in the Kitty with a cargo to Hudson's Bay. Mr. Alexander Ellis was the commander. The voyage was boisterous. In August the ship was enveloped in a fog off Cape Resolution, and then she was surrounded by huge icebergs from which escape seemed to be hopeless. Two boats were got out, and as much provisions as could be put into them were stowed away and one under the command of the captain, the other under that of Armstrong, the mate left the ships side just as the bergs closed upon the ill-fated vessel and crushed her in pieces. She then went down. The boats managed to get out through an opening, but only to find themselves in a "field" of ice, consisting of floating masses, the pieces which sealed by threatening destruction at every moment. They could not, however, reach the open sea; and in the meantime such was the cold that frost bite began to appear. Such remedies as they had within reach were applied, but they were useless, for the poor sufferers gradually became worse, and dropped off one after another. The survivors performed the sorrowful duty of consigning their comrades to the deep, thanking as they did so that perhaps the next would be one of themselves. The crew worked willingly as their physical infirmities would permit them. Day after day did they work on, hoping that their efforts would be successful, or that some welcome sail would heave in sight and rescue them from their unfortunate situation; but none appeared. At last the boats separated in a fog, and the captain's boat was never heard of again. Hunger was now added to their other miseries. The survivors were gradually sinking under their privations. Several became raving maniacs; they could not recognize their companions; while scenes which they had witnessed at home in their family circles were repeated over and over again—in their imagination they beheld their sisters, mothers, or wives, as the case may be, and endeavoured to clasp them, and soon died in the most fearful agonies.—Two or three besides Armstrong only remained when the welcome cry of "land" was raised, and the men strained their eyes and asked one another could it be real.—It was at length reached, but too late for some of them. The ecstacy of such a discovery after being sixty-two days in an open boat, and suffering such privations in a polar region, was too much for them, and all, with the exception of Armstrong, as they reached the long-wished-for land, sank to the ground exhausted, and died. Thus the whole of the crew with the exception of one had died, and it is no wonder that he dropped upon his knees and returned thanks to his God that he had been spared. Having obtained a little rest, he wandered along the shore, and was so fortunate as to fall in with some Esquimaux on a hunting expedition. They conducted him to their huts, and there kept him for a considerable time until he had recruited his strength. They then brought him to a place were some Moravian missionaries were residing, who forwarded him to St. Johns in the early part of the present month.

FRENCH CANADIANISM.

The London Times has given importance to a Montreal Municipal dispute,—which only a local paper noticed at the time,—by making it the subject of a leading editorial and an opportunity for denouncing French ingratitude. The Times enumerates the benefit that the French population of the Province have derived from British rule; and they are as far correctly stated that there is probably no dependency of the British Crown more favored at the present day than that of Lower Canada. Every effort has been made to conciliate her people—their national prejudices have been respected, their language has been preserved, and their religion has been placed on a footing of perfect equality with that of the Episcopal establishment. If Lower Canada had remained a French Colony, it could not have been as politically free as it is now if it had been absorbed by the United States, or by the English colonies that sweep around it, the unanimity of an unprogressive Province in the centre of the North American Continent would not be witnessed, nor would a crop of unpaid [illegible] be found flourishing in the midst of an Anglo-Saxon empire. In the nature of things French Lower Canadian influence ought long ago to have been swamped; and it would have been swamped if it had not been for the protecting aegis of British Rule. Many people on both sides of the line, impugned that the policy of the British Government in this respect has not proved beneficial to the best interests of Canada, and may not adopted and pursued from purely unselfish motives. The French population in Canada—the most peaceful and contented probably in the world—have once goaded to rebellion, and American sympathy, then displayed in their behalf, opened the eyes of the Home Government to the danger of having a disconnected colony lying within the very shadow of the great Republic. Ever since 1838, the fullest liberty has been granted to the French Canadians. They have been allowed and encouraged to retain a nationality of their own and their separate, especially, has been fostered. They [illegible] at present, as people more than [illegible] They detest our [illegible] and would gladly see the end of British rule; but they [illegible] dread nothing so much as annexation to the United States, which would [illegible] the State Rights they [illegible] ship.

The remarks of the Montreal Aldermen which the Times makes the text of its indignation article, were utterly beneath contempt or notice. The man must have imbibed from the dregs of society, if we are to judge him by the vulgarity of his language or the stupidity of his statements.—The Times makes a great mistake in supposing that they are endorsed by any section of the French Canadian population.—In cities like Quebec and Montreal, where society is mixed and where most of the citizens are French extraction are, so to speak parvenus, and looked upon as such by their more aristocratic fellow-subjects of English birth, a great deal of jealousy exists. That jealousy would of course be exhibited by such an event as the Royal visit, especially if more notice was taken of one party than the other. But it is quite absurd to regard such a feeling as evidence of disloyalty, or even of a passing dissatisfaction with British rule.

EXALTED SENTIMENTS.

In a debate in the Edgfish Wesleyan Conference, on Church Rates, the following sentiments were uttered by some of the leading men there:

Mr. Punshon said—"I do submit that it will be a sad thing for us if at any time we are committed either to one side or the other, on one of those questions that vex and agitate the public mind. My opinion on the political liberty of Methodism is, that it is liberty in the true sense. I should be very sorry to see two or three representatives of Methodism all sitting and voting on one side, or that the day would come when Methodist voters in any particular constituency should all go up and vote for the same man. My notion of political liberty is liberty to differ; and then on those great religious questions on which all our denominational influences ought to be brought to bear with Niagara force, that those differing on merely political subjects should be found here acting on the same principles, directing the mind of the House of Commons, so far as they are able, to the same results."

Mr. Arthur said—"I feel one anxiety, and only one as to this subject, and that is least the result of it should be to diminish the proper catholicity of Methodism, by pushing us to one side or the other. My mode of viewing these things is not that which I have heard expressed to-night.—It has been said we have nothing to do with either side. We have to do with all. The Church of Christ in the realm of England is like that of Corinth, a Church that cannot be written to as spiritual, in the high sense of the word, but as carnal as babes in Christ. It is a church in which there are strifes and divisions. One part calls itself by one name Episcopalian; another, Presbyterians; another, Methodists; another, Congregational. All these are true branches of God's catholic Church; this Methodism is one branch, and is related to them all. It is one of the youngest branches, and there is not one of the others the blood of which does not run in our veins. We draw from the Establishment to our history; its influences like those that belong to such a building as this in which we are here assembled; draw from Puritanism very largely; in our organization we draw from Presbyterianism immensely; and we draw from the Moravian Church too. We belong to the Catholic Church. The Catholic Church is related to us. My feeling towards other churches is not 'I have nothing to do with you,' but 'I am the friend of all, the enemy of none.' I believe that the more thoroughly catholic we are, the more we shall be blessed. As to our bearing upon the future history of the Established Church in this country, there is nothing so friendly to the true interests of that Church as our unpolitical Methodist bearing. Go on, taking no sides, having nothing to do with party strifes. I do entreat every brother, so far as his personal influences extends, to counteract in private conversation every tendency to drive us to extremes. I should be very sorry to see the day when Methodism did not contain men of wide differences of opinion."

THE POPE'S CLEMENCY.

The Opinion National says:—"We receive from Rome numerous letters which all agree in contradicting the news circulated by several journals that all the political prisoners belonging to the Romagnas have been released. The fact is that they all, without a single exception, remain in irons. Some of the prisoners (the Opinion gives their names) were set at liberty on June 24, but none of them were from the Romagnas. Of these very few, almost all, had but a few weeks or days to remain in prison before the term of their sentence would expire, and the majority returned to their families afflicted with incurable diseases contracted during their confinement.—"What matters?" said the priest; "we have done our best to save their souls!" A favourite device of the Roman government when it wishes to gain credit for clemency is to remit an illusory portion of a heavy sentence in cases where the recipient of the favour has already suffered so much that he is not likely to live to enjoy it. For example, four years have been struck off the sentence of hard labour to which young Mazzoprati, of Todi, was condemned. But he is now nothing but a living skeleton stretched upon a bed of suffering. He was once a merchant. Since his imprisonment he has learnt of the death of his father (who died of grief,) of his two sons, and the utter ruin of his house. His young and beautiful wife has been obliged to go out to service to provide for the sustenance of his only remaining child. In most countries when a criminal is thought to deserve more than twenty years' imprisonment, he is sentenced for life, or sometimes, which is more humane to death. But here forty years of the galleys is quite a common thing. But this is not all; political vengeance inflicts a sentence of fifteen or twenty years in irons even after death. To those upon the minimum of the prisoner, when he dies, is kept inherited of an Anglo-Saxon empire. In the nature of things French Lower Canadian influence ought long ago to have been swamped; and it would have been swamped if it had not been for the protecting aegis of British Rule. Many people on both sides of the line, impugned that the policy of the British Government in this respect has not proved beneficial to the best interests of Canada, and may not adopted and pursued from purely unselfish motives. The French population in Canada—the most peaceful and contented probably in the world—have once goaded to rebellion, and American sympathy, then displayed in their behalf, opened the eyes of the Home Government to the danger of having a disconnected colony lying within the very shadow of the great Republic. Ever since 1838, the fullest liberty has been granted to the French Canadians. They have been allowed and encouraged to retain a nationality of their own and their separate, especially, has been fostered. They [illegible] at present, as people more than [illegible] They detest our [illegible] and would gladly see the end of British rule; but they [illegible] dread nothing so much as annexation to the United States, which would [illegible] the State Rights they [illegible] ship.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN CANADA.

Loyalty to a gentleman idea—to a great cause, represented by a great name, gives dignity to a man. It is the high privilege of the noble and good to claim the respect of the bad and ignoble. A just and manly loyalty to the representative and head of great institutions becomes a free people.—We respect the Queen as the embodiment of our wise freedom; and as a good and accomplished woman. We are well affected towards her eldest son. We are curious to learn all about him, for in his promise lies much of the future Empire. His visit to Canada and the United States was wisely planned, as affording her Majesty's American subjects an opportunity of expressing their loyalty. But, accustomed as we are in this country to municipal flunkeyism of the coarsest description, we were not prepared for the nauseous, grovelling spirit in which some of our colonial brethren have received and written about a boy of eighteen. We are told that at St. Johns, the New Brunswickers appeared so awe-struck at the sight of royalty upon two legs, for all the world like Brown or Smith, that they never ventured a sound or movement. Little girls gave the awful figure "a shower-bath of flowers;" and when it had disappeared the crowd scrambled for the flowers which the royal boot had bruised! This is not loyalty—it is a slavish and degrading idolatry.

We remember a paragraph in Gilbert A'Becket's old "Figaro," in which the court newsman of the day was parodied.—"Her Royal Highness the Princess Victoria walked yesterday in Kensington-gardens. Her Royal Highness, we understand used both legs." There was humorous exaggeration of the court newsman's flunkeyism in this; but had her Majesty, when Princess, visited Canada, we suspect the paragraph from "Figaro" would have been copied as a grave piece of information.—Herald's Paper.

MR. SPURGEON'S CONTINENTAL EXPERIENCE.

A meeting of Mr. Spurgeon's friends was held in the partly completed "Tabernacle" on Tuesday afternoon, for the purpose of hearing from Mr. Spurgeon some account of his recent tour upon the continent. The specific object of the meeting was to collect funds for the completion of the structure, more than £5,500 being still required, although £22,196. 19s. 2d. has been expended. Several ministers and gentlemen preceded Mr. Spurgeon, who ultimately gave his narrative in a hurried and somewhat disconnected form. He referred to the prevalence of superstition on the continent, and said he went out with some of the "Irish brigade" intended for the protection of the Pope. He never saw such an irregular set of brutes in his life. There was a great scarcety of luggage—they had only one pocket-handkerchief and some boiled potatoes among them. Antwerp he described as being the most religious place on the face of the earth in a bad sense—it was full of superstition, and images of the Virgin Mary abounded in every corner. With regard to the pope, he hoped his rotten throne would very soon fall, and that Garibaldi would be the means of shaking it. Prolonged cheers followed this remark. Of Cologne, he remembered more of what he smelt than what he saw. Albert Smith had said there were seventy different descriptions of smells there; but he had found every bit of yard gave something more horrible than he had met before.—Baden was a godless place. He went to see the gaming-table, and thought it the most frightful sight he ever beheld. Those were best off who lost. If they lost it served them right, but if they won the devil would have them. In Prussia he was glad to find a great hatred to Louis Napoleon, and he feared that some day a catastrophe would occur which would make the people of England regret that they had allied themselves to a tyrant, and not to Prussia, their natural ally. In Prussia he found all the work done by women, and it made him truly indignant. "If," said he, "I had been one of the strapping women I saw, with my husband smoking his pipe and looking on while I worked, and had there been an act for giving wives who beat their husbands two months' imprisonment, I would have broken that act.

ATROCIOUS MURDER OF A CHILD IN GLASGOW.

The Glasgow (Scotland) papers state that about three o'clock on Saturday afternoon last, a murder of a most barbarous and cold-blooded character was perpetrated on the south side of the river, opposite to Clark's Thread Mill, by a young man named John M'Fadyen, a native of Belfast, but who is at present residing with his parents in Rose street. The victim of this monstrous cruelty was a child about two years of age, the son of John Shields, laborer, Constantine road. The following statement by the perpetrator of this horrid act will fully explain the nature of the case. The prisoner states that he met the little boy in Commercial Road about two o'clock on Saturday afternoon; and that he had that day been endeavouring to procure as much money as would enable him to attend the Jupiter Saloon in the Saltmarket but was unable to do so. Observing that the child was alone, and pretty well dressed, it struck him that if he could manage to get him stripped he would get as much money for the clothes in "Paddy's Market" as would enable him to go to the Jupiter that night. He was afraid, however, to attempt it on the street, lest he might be detected; and he led the child by the hand down to the river, along the banks of which they walked till they arrived near Clark's Thread Mill. He here stripped the little boy, and afterwards went coolly down to the edge of the river and pitched him in. It would seem that the water at that point being very shallow, the child had risen to his feet and attempted to clamber on to the bank. M'Fadyen, however, got a long stick with which he pushed the poor child back into deep water, and held him down until he was drowned. A gentleman who was at a considerable distance observed the occurrence, and made all possible haste to reach the spot, but before he arrived the cold-blooded deed was consummated. M'Fadyen endeavored to make off, but was quickly captured. The body was found on Sunday morning. M'Fadyen states that he is twenty years of age, but from his appearance no one would take him to be more than sixteen or seventeen. His likewise states that he was upwards of four years and a half an inmate of the Boys' House of Refuge, but is unable to read or write. When interrogated on this point, he stated that he was chiefly employed, while in that institution, making stocks.—Last week he was convicted of theft at the Southern Police Court, but allowed to go free after having been forty-eight hours in prison. The first question that will naturally arise will be—Is the lad M'Fadyen sane? It is very doubtful if he is. On being taken to the Eastern Police Office his mother was sent for, and she states her son's age to be twenty years, though from appearance he might be taken to be only fourteen or fifteen. He has been four years in the Reformatory School, yet he cannot read. On being questioned at the Police Office, as far from denying his guilt of the horrid crime with which he was accused, he calmly stated that he drowned the boy, and that he intended selling the clothes. He is quite unimpassioned, and nothing can excite him. He coolly remarked, "I know I shall be hanged;" and since his apprehension on Saturday afternoon he has, when not eating, almost constantly been sleeping.

THE QUESTION OF PRECEDENCE.

The Toronto Leader has searched out and published what is termed "The Imperial table of Colonial Precedence," which certainly explains some of the conduct of the Royal party, and removes the odium which that conduct subjected them to.—These Rules of Precedence, we are told, have been acquiesced in in this colony, and no objections made to them. By these and subsequent regulations we learn that only two sects are embraced, the Episcopal and the Catholic,—that the former has the precedence of the latter,—that an Episcopal Bishop precedes a Catholic Archbishop,—that the Bishop is before Judges or Members of the Government, is in fact the next to the Governor or person liable to exercise governing powers in the colony, is No. 3; the Archdeacon is No. 16. No notice is taken of the other Clergy, and our only regret is that any ecclesiastic is noticed in it at all. If our Clergy seek for distinction let them seek it in the work which they have undertaken,—the care of souls.

Our object in referring to this subject is to point out the evil of having such an obnoxious table acknowledged by us. It is true it is prepared by the Imperial Government, but if we remonstrated against the impolicy of following such objectionable rules on occasions such as the Prince of Wales' visit, in a colony where the principle of religious equality is recognized, and where all semblance of Church-and-Stateism is pretended to be banished for evermore — no doubt these remonstrances would receive careful consideration by the home government. The day has gone by in Canada when one portion of the community will bear without resistance any preference shown to one denomination above another. As a proof of this every move during the late festive occasion was watched with an eagle's eye, every attention shown to an opposite denomination was noted and dwelt upon, every refusal to notice an address from others was put down as an insult. And altogether it is very generally believed or at all events expressed that the Royal party were very unbrotherly in their attentions to the several denominations composing the deputations waiting on His Royal Highness.

It may be well to consider that the Duke of Newcastle who assumes all the responsibility of the actions of the Prince, has never been on the American Continent before,—that probably every County and State he has heretofore visited has been under the incubus of a State Church, and where such an incongruity exists there will always be precedences claimed and granted, because the minority cannot help themselves. When the clergy set above the people for their support, they claim civil distinction, and the State yields it. But in Canada we have worked ourselves out of this mesh; and a hard struggle we had. When we call to mind the 57 Rectories and every seventh acre of land claimed by a Church that laboured for a quarter of a century to be a dominant Church, we feel proud of having prevented this; that notwithstanding we have not got all we desired, smiling in a land where the term "dissenter" has no significance. The Duke for the first time sets foot in Upper Canada, at least as a free land, and although the atmosphere is rather too rarified for trans-atlantic lungs, it is surprising that he managed so well and made so few blunders. In fact his course showed that he conformed strictly to the Imperial table. This being a secret and known only to a few it was generally supposed that he showed too decided a preference to the ruling hierarchies around him at the moment. The strong feeling at Kingston was founded upon the precedence shown to the Roman Catholic Ecclesiastics in Lower Canada, and the Orangemen seemed determined to offset that attention by a large display of Protestantism worthy of Upper Canada, wherein thank God we have now the great blessing of religious equality. It is much easier to find fault than to set wisely, and taking all the circumstances into the account we feel disposed to give His Grace the Duke of Newcastle credit for the manner in which he conducted the previous object of his charge through a people so intensely loyal and so sensitive of their rights as Britons. May he be as successful in conducting Lord Renfrew through Brother Jonathan's territory, and back again to his dear mother the Queen—God bless her.

The Town council of Brantford, with a debt of half a million of dollars, has fixed their assessment at ten cents in the dollar. This is the first instance of repudiation yet adopted in this province.

THE ARCHES.

We would call the attention of the Town authorities to the fact that the arches erected for the occasion of the Prince's visit are in a condition anything by safe to life and property. Part of the arch in Ashburnham fell to the ground with a crash a day or two ago; fortunately no person was near the arch at the time. Beside the chance of their being blown down by storm, the fact that the material is so combustable, and standing in proximity to so much valuable property, is enough to warrant their removal. We have heard some talk of the intention of parties to strengthen the arches and make them permanent fixtures. If there is anything serious in the proposition we would recommend that the work be proceeded with immediately; otherwise that they be razed.

ORANGEMEN READ!

The Orange question has come to a crisis, and Messrs. Cartier & Co., have set about work to compound a pill for their colleagues and supporters to swallow, in the shape of a bill for the "Extirpation of Secret Societies." Let Orangemen read the following from a Lower Canadian paper deep in the confidence of the Ministry, and learn the fate in reserve for them at the hands of the Government that many of them have so long helped to bolster up:—

"The only remedy for the evil is to impose a bridle on the secret societies—to labor earnestly to extirpate them from Canadian soil by wise regulations, which will restrain their liberty of action. Prompt and energetic measures are necessary; the passions are inflamed, an explosion is to be apprehended. We have to sound the abyss; let us examine it. Our authorities will have the courage to do their duty; Providence has assigned to them the difficult function of directing the progressive movement of our people; they must watch that they move in the right way. The times are difficult; difficulties numberless are in the way; but courage must increase as present difficulties present themselves. Every year Orangemen get new disciples in Upper Canada; no one knows how far its ramifications extend in Lower Canada. We must, therefore, put limits to the extension of this secret society. Every association of this kind must be extirpated—annihilated for the benefit of the Canadian people; when evil intentions labour to disturb society, honest men must combine in the assistance of the good cause."

PRINCE ALFRED.—It seems that our Prince is not the only member of the illustrious family who has left the Royal home to see the world and the people that live in it. An American contemporary says:—"Advices from Madeira bring us full accounts of the adventures in that lovely island of Prince Alfred of England, the younger brother of the Prince of Wales. There are, happily for this naval youth, more oranges than Orangemen in Madeira, and he has been enjoying himself, therefore, without let or hinderance. The Madeirans gave him a ball, which they themselves found very delightful, as the tide of royal and noble travel towards their sunny shores, which had fallen off sadly of late through the blight of their wines, rose again this past winter with the troubles in Southern Italy. Two hundred and fifty "people of importance" assembled to greet the scion of British royalty, and rose when his rather abbreviated Highness entered the room to the air of "God save the Queen." The little Prince, much to his credit, was horribly abashed at this, and cried out, "Oh, what shall I do? Do beg of them all to sit down!" A scamper in the mountain, cricket playing, (H. R. H. getting a "duck's egg" twice) made up an entertainment so easy to the son of Victoria, that he promised the island the honor of a second visit on his way home."

According to the Canada Gazette, certain lands in the township of Stone, county of Pontiac, L. C., will be open for sale for actual settlement, on and after the 8th October,—the undisposed surveyed lands in the county of Gaspe, on and after the 14th October, and certain lands in the township of Galway, county of Peterboro, on and after the 17th October.

☞ It will be seen by advertisement that S. M. Aitken, Esq., is about to retire from business, and advertises his whole stock to be sold by auction, on Tuesday next. A good chance for bargains.

☞ Some wags doped the quietness and busy bodies of St. Louis last week, by pretending to be the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Newcastle. They carried out the hoax very well for some time, it is said.

☞ We are glad to learn that His Worship the Mayor is convalescent, and will probably be able to attend to his official duties in a few days.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, Sept. 24, 1860.

Council met. His Worship the Mayor in the Chair. Present—Messrs. Tools, Morrow, McDougall, Ormond, Ogilvy, Walton, O'Bierne, Chamberlin, Ryan, and Harty.

A communication from the Secretary of the Debating Club, asking the use of the Town Hall on Friday evening free of charge was read, and the request granted.

Moved by Mr. Chamberlin, seconded by Mr. O'Bierne,—That the Town Council of the Town of Peterboro' on behalf of the rate-payers do return their sincere thanks to the Executive Committee for the energetic and handsome manner in which the arrangements to receive the Prince were executed, and that the Clerk do notify them to that effect.—Carried.

A communication from Mr. J. Shaw asking the Council to sanction the transfer of the License of M. Lavoie to himself accompanied by the signatures of a number of respectable rate-payers, was read.

Mr. Tools was of opinion that the communication ought to be referred to the Inspector; the Council had no right to interfere with the Inspector's prerogatives, and as had been done in previous cases of this kind, it ought to be left entirely with the Board of Inspectors.

Mr. Morrow was of the same opinion.

Mr. O'Bierne thought differently.

Mr. Chamberlin agreed with Mr. O'Bierne and moved, That the Council instruct the Inspector to grant the transfer of the License, which was carried on a division.

Moved by Mr. Chamberlin, seconded by Mr. O'Bierne — That the thanks of this Council be given to the Mayor for the handsome manner in which he resigned his prerogative of presenting the Address to the Prince of Wales first in favor of the Counties Council.—Carried.

The Council then went into Committee of the Whole on the second reading of the By-law for levying rates and assessments for the year 1860. Mr. Ogilvy in the chair.

Mr. O'Bierne moved that the blank in the preamble be filled in with the sum of £3,608.

A lahel encounter here ensued between Mr. O'Bierne and Mr. Chamberlin, lasting about 10 minutes; the former switched his brother members of the Committee temperingly. Mr. O'Bierne left the room. Mr. Ormond caught up the spirit, and with the assistance of Mr. Morrow, retaliated with force. A member moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, but before the motion could be put from the Chair the Council broke up with the semi-understanding to meet again on next night, when (as one member expressed himself) they might feel in better temper for business.

TUESDAY, Sept. 25.

The Council met. Mr. Ryan in the Chair. Members all present.

The Council then went into Committee of the whole on the appropriation By-law; Mr. Tools in the Chair.

The items in the By-law were read over seperately; when the Municipal Loan Fund Appropriations were VOTED DOWN!

Yeas—(for the appropriation)—Messrs. Morrow, Ormond, O'Bierne and Walton.

Nays—(against the appropriation)—Messrs McDougal, Ogilvy, Chamberlin, Ryan, Harty, Maloney, White, and (we suppose) the chairman, Mr. Tools.

The Committee then arose, reported progress. Council resumed.

The following resolution was handed by Mr. O'Bierne to Mr Walton who succeeded, after considerable exertion, to read it:

Moved by Mr. Walton, seconded by Mr. Ormond—That the report of the Finance Committee be received and adopted, and that the treasurer be authorized to pay the accounts alluded to in the report, amounting in all to 18 in number; the whole sum required will be twenty-six dollars and eleven cents—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till Thursday night at 7½ o'clock.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW JOURNAL.—The September issue of this Quarterly publication presents a delightful table of contents, including an article on "Dean Swift and his concerns;" a poem by Mr. Dugmore, a story by Alice Carey, (unfinished) sketches of Virginia, contributed by John Estes Cooke; "The Pinetop World,"—a story by late William North; "Messalina," and a number of minor articles of more than usual interest. The illustrations are "Juliet," the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, a very fine steel plate, Electrotype—"Life's morning and evening," "September morning," and a portrait of J. A. Cortet.

BAPTISM.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I am unwilling to enter upon any kind of controversy, and religious controversy above all others. But as I was prevented from sending your paper of the 13th instant to the Old Country lest my friends there should imagine that Anabaptism was gaining ground here, I trust I may be heard one word in reply, and my reply shall the shape of Baptism, Presbyterianism, Methodism, or any other branch of the Christian Church, and it was with this spirit, and not from any partiality to Anabaptism, that induced us to transcribe the article in question into our columns. Our correspondent may, and we doubt not will, find a pen willing to cope with his in a discussion on the points of difference, but for our own part we would be sorry to be the medium of such controversy if it could be avoided.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—This, I believe, is the nineteenth century, as it commonly counts in years. But I also believe that as with the waves as with the years,—progress ebbs and flows. This conclusion seems verified in your "Teachers' Column," from which it appears that the human mind is at times so weak as not to be able to perceive the force even of mathematical demonstration. If the minds of our Teachers are not in this state I think your publishing their mathematical papers without note or comment should have satisfied all parties.

Yours, Sir, truly,

DIOPHANTUS.

A trust setting forth the proofs of these propositions, we are glad to learn, is in course of preparation, by a master hand, and will be published.

WHO PULLED THE TOOTH!

To the Editor of the Examiner.

In looking over your valuable paper of the 13th inst., my eye happened to drop on a report of a coroner's inquest that had been held on the dead body of one Thomas Morrow. Now, sir, I am not surprised because there was an inquest held on a person, but it is at the result of the deliberations of this highly intelligent and dignified body (whoever they were.) Dear reader will you be kind enough to pick up your glasses, brush the cobwebs off them, place them on your nasal organ, and take a peep at this wonderful verdict. Here it is—"The said Thomas Morrow came to his death from exhaustion, from inability to swallow nourishment, caused by inflamation of the jaw, arising from the extraction of part of a tooth." We have no reason to doubt any part of this verdict, neither are we inclined to do so. If extraction was the cause of the death of this person, why did not the jury go a little further? If I had been commissioned as prompter to the person who took the evidence, I would have suggested the following questions: Who or what is the person that performed this operation? Is he capable of performing an operation of this nature? Does he know anything about the structure of the teeth, or their connection with the jaw? Is he acquainted with the nerves, muscles, &c., of the face, or what their connection is (if any) with the jaw? Or to sum up, is he posted in the anatomy and physiology of the head? If those questions were answered, whether in the affirmative or negative, I would then ask, under what circumstances was the tooth extracted? Was the jaw diseased at the time, or in a fit state for the operation? If it was not why should it result as it did? If it was, why was the tooth extracted? These are question which should not be asked by an individual only, but by the whole community. I have been informed by gentlemen up in anatomy, physiology &c. that there is a time for performing all kinds of surgical operations, tooth pulling not excluded. There is a time after severe toothache when it would be highly improper to extract a tooth. The pain has been so intense that not only the socket of the tooth is inflamed and irritated, but all the surrounding parts. The muscles become swollen and to a certain extent contracted. Under such circumstances I would like to know the most proper course to take.—There appears to be only two, viz.,—apply something to the parts in order to remove the inflamation; after the inflamation has subsided remove the tooth, or take it out under all this irritation. I think an enlightened public can soon discern which of the two is most proper.

Perhaps this model jury came to the charitable conclusion that the man who extracted the part of the tooth was acting as a public benefactor, in relieving a distressed human being from the excruciating pain of tooth-ache, and that the result was an accident, and of course accidents will happen with the best of people. Perhaps they viewed it through another lens of still more magnifying power, and saw the person was a man of note, or to use a vulgar, but not uncommon Yankee phrase, some pumpkins! which of course would be proof positive against him doing anything wrong, no matter under what circumstances. In reality I think the jury should have been a little more particular in their investigation. Perhaps they thought it enough for the public to know that a man had died from the effects of pulling a tooth, and at the same time would insinuate that every person suffering in the same way is liable to a like calamity.

This operation to some so simple often terminates fatally. We can see cases of it every now and then, in jaw fracturing, breaking teeth, &c., and the last by record is the verdict of the jury (which should be immortalized) on the dead body of poor Morrow. I think a great deal of this is owing to the carelessness of people allowing every person who can handle scout-book to to perform the operation.

I will now conclude by simply asking if you do not think the person who extracted the tooth for poor Morrow is guilty of a malpractice.

I remain, dear sir,
your obed't servant,
G. A., HOMBASTES.

A communication from Mr. E. P. Ford has been received too late for this issue.

A FIELD FOR EMIGRATION.

The three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edwards Island comprise in all an extent of country capable of supporting some 10,000,000 or even 20,000,000 people. The united population of all these is much short of 2,000,000.—Abounding in the most magnificent harbors and rivers, with fisheries second only to Newfoundland—with almost boundless mineral resources in coal, iron, copper, and plumbago—with land of the richest description to be had almost for asking, and with demand for labor which is almost greater here than in any other part of the world—who can solve the problem why it is that emigrants do not settle here? The home government must be to blame for not directing their attention in this matter of lands like these—for not holding out some inducements to the thousands of colonists who gaily leave England for the West, to pause before they rush into the bosom of Yankeedom, and either gain a wretched livelihood as their "helps," or perish outright in the attempt to drive a profitless ranch which has been sold to them by some scamp agent on a grand scale. If emigrants could be induced [illegible] to undergo in settling on [illegible] Irish emigrants, whose very names are hated by the Americans—if they could only be made aware of the immeasurable advantages held out to colonists settling in these provinces, there might be hope of their becoming great, wealthy, and powerful States, even in our own time. But, in England, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are to emigrants almost as unknown as Mesopotamia or the shores of the Caspian Sea.—Letter in the Times.

News of the Week.

—The invitation of the Prince to attend a ball in Buffalo has been declined with thanks.

—The New York Syrian Relief Fund now amounts to about $12,000. The Committee sent to Syria last week, $3,500.

—The number of beef cattle consumed in New York, is 6,000 weekly, averaging sixty dollars a piece making over twelve thousand dollars per season.

—The number of emigrants arrived at Quebec this season to the 11th August has been 6,805, an increase of 761 over the corresponding period of last year.

—We have been told says the St. Marys Argus, that Mr. Woods of Fullarton has just thrashed a field of wheat which yielded a trifle over fifty bushels to the acre.

—The Philadelphia Ledger thinks the wheat harvest is going to bring the country a hundred millions of dollars extra, and wants to know what will be done with the money.

—The steamer Francisco de Asis from Truxillo, at Havana, reports that General Walker and Col. Rudler had been shot by the Honduras authorities. Walker's men were allowed to depart unmolested.

—It is estimated that the reception of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will cost the Provincial Government of the Canadas no less a sum than $1,000,000, independent of the vast amounts spent by the different towns.

—A Lieutenant in an Austrian regiment in Bohemia has invented a new cannon, which in the opinion of the judges, far surpasses the Armstrong and Wentworth guns for precision, range and strength, and rapidity of loading.

—The London Times of the 5th instant states, that "in the Colonial market a reduction has taken place in Canadian descriptions, especially Grand Trunk stock. The latter closed at 31¼ to ½ per cent lower than yesterday."

—An Indiana correspondent remarks that thrashing machine accidents are shockingly common in that State this season. He remarks:—"We are making a moderate estimate when we say that thirty men have been killed or wounded by thrashing machines in Indiana, during the present season."

—The Marquis and Marchioness of Chandos proceeded by rail to Toronto on Monday, on their route for Hamilton, from a visit to Captain and Mrs. Hayward, of Ravenscourt, near Cobourg, where they had been some days, evincing much interest in the agriculture of this vicinity and also the picturesque scenery of Rice Lake and its neighbourhood.

—We understand that Lord Renfrew will be accompanied in his tour through the United States by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, the Earl St. Germains, Major-General the Hon. R. Bruce, Lord Lyons, the British ambassador to the United States, and other distinguished gentlemen, all of whom have taken apartments at the Russell.

—A photograph picture of the members of the United Presbyterian Synod, comprising all the members and elders who were present—69 of the former, and 44 of the latter—was taken at Hamilton, in June last, by Mr. Robert Milne. He also, on the same occasion, photographed the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, then sitting in Hamilton. Both pictures are very creditable to the artist.

—Recruiting for Garibaldi is advertised in the London papers as an "excursion to the South of Italy." A select party of English excursionists intend to visit South Italy. The excursionists will be furnished with means for self-defence, and with a view of recognising each other, will be attired in a picturesque and uniform costume. General Garibaldi has liberally granted the excursionists a free passage to Sicily and Italy; and they will be supplied with rations and clothing suitable for the climate.

—Mr. Peasefather, the Governor's Secretary, came very near death on Thursday Evening, at Detroit. He had just landed on the wharf, amidst an immense crowd, when the horses attached to a carriage became frightened, and dashed off, the crowd gave way before them, and Mr. Peasefather was thrown into the water. Three times he sank, the last time driven down to the steamer's paddle, but as often rose to the surface, with his dispatch still in hands, and was finally rescued by the by-standers.

—The Kingston News, an Orange paper, circulates the following information relative to the progress of Orangeism:—A gentleman from the township of Loborough, informs us that the sensation caused among the inhabitants there, by the treatment of the colonel of Kingston, at the hands of the Duke of Newcastle, has induced a great number of young and middle-aged men to connect themselves with the Orange Society; and in other neighboring townships a similar movement is going on. In this city, also, a number of candidates of the highest respectability have been proposed for admission.

—The reverend Father Giovanni, Garibaldi's soldier monk, displayed great courage at the battle of Melazzo. Unarmed, only bearing the cross in his hand, he ran along the ranks, cheering and encouraging the volunteers to the fight, constantly shouting to them, "Fear not, God is on our side!—Mark, I, his minister, am the foremost to expose myself to the grape-shot, and foremost in the valley of mortality, yet I remain unscathed. Charge, Italians, charge!" And still, as he shouted, he waved aloft the cross. Setting them this example, and repeating aloud passages from Scripture, he cheered on the soldiers; to some purpose, it must be owned, as by their indomitable courage they carried the strong position of Melazzo.

During the last month or six weeks great apprehensions of famine have been felt in England the weather having been excessively wet. Shortsighted speculators on this side of the Atlantic were rubbing their hands with glee over this prospect—a very bad one for all parties—but they received a sudden check by the latest accounts, from which we learn that a week of bright weather had such a fine effect upon the growing crops that they will come nearly up to the average yield. The momentary panic in England is important in more ways than one, and it is another proof that the dearth inflicted by the dense population of Great Britain is no near to the supply that a few days of sunshine make the most enormous difference in the state of the market.

LATEST from EUROPE.

STATE OF AFFAIRS BEFORE THE FLIGHT OF THE KING.

NAPLES, Sept. 4, [via Genoa.]

The Royal troops are concentrated near Naples. Placards have been posted up bearing the words, "Long live Victor Emanuel!" several soldiers tore them down. The lazzaroni became irritated, and a conflict ensued.

An insurrection has broken out at Sala, where the Government of King Victor Emanuel has been proclaimed.

Four thousand men under the command of General Torre, have disembarked at Sapri.

A letter from Naples, of the 30th ult. says:

"The pictures, the furniture of the palace, and the baggage of the King, have this afternoon been embarked on board a Spanish vessel. Gen. Briganti is said to have been guilty of the most shameful treason; he moved his soldiers in such a way that they were surrounded, but they, in their indignation, are stated to have shot him."

A letter from Naples to the Siecle says: "The King, on hearing the disastrous accounts of the insurrection, said in a sorrowful tone to those around him, 'My soldiers, nevertheless, had promised to defend me.' 'Sire,' replied a General, who was standing near, 'when the soldiers are in your presence they cry 'Long live the King!' but the moment they turn their backs, and it is necessary to lead them against the enemy, they cry 'Garibaldi for ever!' That sorcerer of a man has bewitched them, and no one can any longer be relied on. The old lazzaroni, those traditional supporters of the throne of Naples, but now become Italian people have lately evinced feeling of a threatening character. The riflemen of the guard, irritated at having seen them take the part of the bersaglieri, threatened to give them a drubbing. The people defied them, and a meeting was appointed at Capo di Monte, on the very spot where the attack on the Piedmontese soldiers took place. The riflemen came with their arms and the people with sticks in their hands, and their pockets filled with stones. They looked at each other for some time, but without either party venturing to commence the attack. In the meantime the commandant of the garrison having been informed that a conflict was about to take place, and that it might lead to a revolution in the capital, sent a body of infantry and cavalry to the spot, and ordered the assemblage to disperse, and thus the collision was prevented."

VIENNA, Sept. 1.

The state of affairs in Italy was lately the subject of several Ministerial Conferences, and it has been resolved upon to call back the Austrian ships sent to Syria. It is therefore suspected that Garibaldi's purposes are to land at different places on the Austrian territory, and to stir up the Hungarians to revolution. To prevent such an attempt, a strict watch will be kept over the Austrian coasts. The strengthening of the Italian fortresses is very nearly finished. Several new forts have been built around Verona. At Mantua the very important works on the water's edge have partially been altered. At Peschiera new works of fortification have been erected on the side of the lake; orders have been given to hasten the completion of the cannon boats for the Lake of Garda as much as possible, the Piedmontese Government being known already to possess fifteen of them on the lake.

The fortifications of Venice facing the sea are not thought to be in an effective state; but it is difficult to render them stronger, because of the peculiar nature of the ground.

The garrisons of Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, and Villafranca will be increased. In Verona there are already 40,000 soldiers. The emigration from Venice and South Tyrol is still going on, although the properties of the emigrants are sequestered in favor of their heirs at law. At Trent and Roverdo the Government has again been obliged to arrest several persons, especially at Trent, where the popular feeling is very unsatisfactory.

The Ost Deutsche Post says:

"The Emperor's journey to Warsaw, where he is to meet the Emperor Alexander of Russia, is now looked upon as definitely settled, if we are to believe the autographic correspondence. In all probability the Emperor will go to Germany during the second half of September, where he will visit Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and from there directly go to Warsaw.

A Vienna letter of the 30th ult., in the Boersenhalle, says:

"Two very important telegrams arrived here last night, one of them addressed to the Emperor by the King of Naples, the other to Count de Rechberg, from Count Szechenyi, Austrian Minister at Naples. The latter announced that Francis II. had resolved to leave his States, the situation having become quite hopeless. Other intelligence received during the day leaves no room to doubt that a catastrophe is imminent As to the King's dispatch, it is said to announce His Majesty's determination to retire to Spain for the present. Prince de Metternich, who has arrived here from Paris, had an interview this morning with Count de Rechberg, which lasted several hours.

A general meeting of the National Union at Coburg unanimously adopted as programme the transfer of the central power to Prussia, and the convention of a German Parliament.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz is dead.

Garibaldi at Naples!

The Adriatic arrived in New York on Sunday night.

ENTRANCE OF GARIBALDI INTO NAPLES.

NAPLES, Sept. 8.—Garibaldi made his entrance into Naples at noon this day with his staff alone. The joy is intense.

A Provisional Government has been formed. Naples is tranquil.

He has discovered a National Committee illegally constituted, and has ordered the Prefect of Police to punish its members.

Garibaldi has consigned the fleet and command of Naples to the charge of Admiral Persano, and proclaimed Emanuel King of Italy.

The Minister has conferred Ragusa as Minister of the Interior, and appointed Archil, Director of Police; Gen. Cosenz, Minister of War; and Pisanelli, Minister of Justice.

The capitulation of the forts is expected to take place to-morrow.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Post unfortunately that it is in contemplation to organize a grand demonstration in honor of Garibaldi at the Crystal Palace.

A subscription [illegible] has been set on foot laid between Marseilles, Bonica, and Algiers, so that the Emperor can communicate directly with Paris. The cost of the cable, whether laying down, is 1,000,000f.

The Constitutional positively contradicts the statement that French officers had been lately permitted by their Government to serve in the army of Gen. Lamoriere.

The Neapolitan Navy refused to follow the King of Naples at Gaeta.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post says:—The Emperor of Austria is reported to have made up his mind to grant serious and important reforms with the hope of conciliating the people of Hungary, Austria and Venetia.—The King of Naples, after a short halt for breath at Gaeta, is to proceed to Bavaria to join in a sociable way the family circle of his royal father-in-law.

The Times says:—Our circular contains a number of reports from English counties regarding the prospects of the harvest.—They indicate, on the whole, that wheat will be a full average and of fine quality, and also that the crops of barley and oats will be satisfactory.

FRANCE.

The Patrie says:—

"We have reason to believe that Austria has declared that she would not intervene in Naples while the revolution is confined to that State, and does not threaten other frontiers, but up to the present moment her declarations go no further."

Signor Manna, before returning to Naples, had a conference with Messrs. Rothschild relative to the Neapolitan loan, for which they are contractors.

GARIBALDI'S "RED SHIRTS."—Garibaldi attaches certain fatalistic importance to the color of red, all the most glorious achievements of his life have been signalized by the presence of the red shirts. The red shirts, though in so small a number, struck terror into the banded hosts of the Bourbon army at Calatafimi and at Palermo; and if in other combats the Neapolitans were not to see the red shirts, I feel convinced that they would fight with twice the courage.—Letter in the Daily News.

A BISHOP PREACHING AT NIGHT IN THE OPEN AIR.—On Saturday evening, the Bishop of London preached in the open air to between 1500 and 1600 working men and children, in one of the fields immediately behind Clifton Street, Latimer Road, London. The latter end of the Bishop's address was particularly solemn. Darkness had come on, and the moon had risen, and all around the gipsies' tents were lighted up. Not a sound was heard but the Bishop's voice, and now and then a train on the adjacent railway.

THE paragraph copied from the Peterboro Examiner entitled "A Prince's Feather" in the issue of the Montreal Herald of the 30th ultimo, seems to have raised the ire of Messrs. Strachan & Smith, and their friends. We would state that while we humbly congratulate Messrs. Provincial Exhibition.

The Exhibition held in Hamilton last week appears to have been a success in whatever way viewed. The number of visitors is estimated at from 80,000 to 100,000,and the show of cattle, implements, &c., was usually large. The exhibition was formally opened by H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, on Wednesday, and on Friday the meeting of the Association was held. London was appointed as the place for the next Exhibition. John Berwick, Esq., of Woodstock, was elected President for the term. F. W. Stone, Esq., of Guelph, First Vice-President, and Asa A. Burnham, Esq., of Cobourg, Second do. The following is an extract from the address of the retiring President, T. Wade, Esq., delivered before the Association:—

"The theme (if I may be allowed the expression) to which I shall briefly call your attention, is what is generally called "high farming." The term, I believe, is so well understood as to call for no illustration; the principle is, that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well—not only from the much greater satisfaction in doing it, but also from the fruits; and to apply this general and well-established rule to the subject before us, it is quite certain that there is neither profit nor satisfaction in low farming. If it is possible by high farming to make one acre of land produce what is ordinarily produced on two, it is not only much more profitable, but also much more satisfactory to the farmer. You are, however, well aware, gentlemen, that it is much easier to preach than to practice, and to attain to that perfection of husbandry in our new country that obtains in the old is very difficult. But in order to do anything well, we must raise our standard high—no matter how high; for if we cannot reach the top, we must get as high as we can; and if we labor under some difficulties in our new country they do not in the old, we have many advantages in other ways one is we have their example to copy from, and, what is very encouraging, we are nearly all our own landlords, which, without meaning any disparagement to the old country institution of landlord and tenant, is much more satisfactory to the farmer, and very encouraging to him in his attempts at improvements. The only drawback to this is that it may have the effect of keeping the standard lower than it ought to be, in consequence of the desire to accumulate more acres than cultivate better what we have already. The high price of labour is another drawback. These things combined render it difficult to attain to a very high standard for some time to come.

But to give a practical bearing to these general remarks—there are several requisites wanting, such as skill, knowledge, and adaptation to circumstances. In the first place the farmer must study the nature of the soil he cultivates: what kind of crops it is calculated to produce to the greatest advantage to him, not only in immediate profit, but also to keep up and maintain its fertility; for what might prove an excellent system of management on one farm, might prove quite unsuccessful on another. For instance, some soils are already drained by nature, such as the neighbourhood of Brantford and Paris. Such soils, in order to make them fruitful, and bear heavy crops, require fertilising substances to be added to them, while the clay flats on the north shore of Lake Ontario require draining, before anything like a satisfactory state of husbandry can be attained. Also, we find one kind of soil adapted to one kind of crop which on another it would be useless to attempt growing. These clay soils which cost so much in draining and mixing and comminuting the soil, do not require so much manure, as they naturally possess so much of the elements of fertility in themselves; while the gravels that are easily cleared to begin with, require no draining, are easily ploughed, and generally easily managed, will be soon exhausted if not constantly manured. Showing that things in this world are more evenly balanced than is commonly supposed.

In order to attain to any high standard of farming, it is not only necessary to study the nature of your soil, but the variation which took place in seasons. But whatever the season may be, the highly cultivated farm succeeds the best. If the season is wet the well-drained farm will not suffer, and if the season is dry it is the same, for the roots of plants can penetrate deeper on drained land. Deep ploughing, connected with thorough draining, is also essential, as well as a thorough mixing of the upper soil, or vegetable deposit with the upper surface of the subsoil. An exterminating war against weeds must be constantly kept up, and the motto of "No Surrender" to them is absolutely necessary.

It would be only waste of time to go further into details about minor matters that every farmer must be already well acquainted with; but if thorough cultivation of soil is absolute, it is also very necessary to keep the very best variety of stock in all its branches.

WINTER WHEAT.

It is now generally conceded that the wheat most liable to winter-kill is that which has been lightly covered in. Where a grain drill is used, the wheat can resist the effects of the frost during open winters, and is rarely killed out except where the soil is badly drained or retains moisture on the surface.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so compound that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the entire organism, curing disease and restoring health and healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is afflicted daily with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his disease or malady removed by a remedy as easy as simple and certain.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agreeable manner in which they operate, and the safety with which, when taken according to the printed directions, they may be administered to young or old, make them the favorite cathartic for use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly proclaiming the benefits they have received from its use. Many have been restored from the very jaws of death by the use of this remedy, when the last hope had fled and friends despaired, and when other remedies had failed to produce the slightest benefit. While many publish the fact to the world, thousands of others, in their own private circles, are constantly bearing testimony to the wonderful power of this antidote to pulmonary disease.

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they rem

WHEN AND WHOM TO MARRY

Don't marry when you're still a child;
Don't marry when you're bold and wild;
Don't marry when you're dumb and spoiled;
That's not the time to marry.

Don't marry when you're frail and old;
Don't marry when you're heart is cold;
Don't marry when cushion'd by gold;
That's not the time to marry!

Marry when your limbs you've room;
Marry when on Christ you lean;
Marry when your mind's at ease;
That's the time to marry.

Don't marry one you can't respect;
Don't marry one you can suspect;
Don't marry one you could neglect;
That's not the one to marry!

Don't marry one who woos by stealth;
Don't marry one alone for wealth;
Don't marry one who has not health,
That's not the one to marry!

Marry one you've proved for years;
Marry one whose heart's tried severe;
Marry one who fears what God fears;
That's the one to marry!

THE SISTER OF CHARITY.

The Hospital of Saint Elizabeth stands in one of the great squares of London, and belongs to the Sisters of Charity, who serve themselves within its wards. It is a large brick building, with stone facings and an arched door, by the side of which is the bell of the portress—a lady sister of the establishment.

I had occasion to go there, in behalf of a poor servant, not many months ago, and ringing this bell, a stately, kind-looking woman, wearing the black dress of the order, admitted me, and, on my asking to see the "Reverend Mother," as the Superior-ess is called, took me into a square parlor at the right of the entrance, and went to summon her. The room was plainly furnished, with a long table on which some account books were laying, cane-bottomed chairs, alabaster statues of Saint Elizabeth "Our Lady of Dolors," and "Christ healing the blind man." A beautiful painting of the Crucifixion hung between the windows, and a portrait of his Eminence, the Cardinal, who has made large donations to the institution, was over the fire-place, flanked by a sweet, benevolent face, that seemed familiar, yet had no name by which I could designate it. While I was looking at all these things, and trying to get a peep at the side windows, and speculating about the life the good Sisters must lead, the door opened and a nun entered, wearing the full habit of the order—rosary, crucifix, and all. She entered with a grave dignity that made me revere once her at once, though I got but a faint glimpse of her face till she stood before me. I arose and bowed, and looked at her.

"Reverend Mother, I wish to say——"

She made a slight gesture with her hand.

"I beg your pardon. The Reverend Mother is in town, and in her absence I was sent to you. I am Sister Mary Francis of the Holy Cross."

This passed while I had been gazing at her in utter wonderment. Her regular features, full, proud mouth, and beautiful, clear, gray eyes, shaded by black lashes, had put me strangely in mind of some one I had seen when I was but a child, as my father's house, years ago. When she spoke I was still more puzzled, for the voice, though low and subdued; was still familiar. I concluded that it must be only a wonderful likeness and went on with my errand about the sick person I wished to put under her charge.

"What is her name?" she said, gently.

"Mary Kelly."

"Oh, the one came. A bed has been reserved for her. Dr. Taylor was speaking to the Reverend Mother only yesterday about her."

"Yes, I saw him, and asked him to do so. I can bring her then, to-day?"

"At two this afternoon, if you please."

Having finished my business, I should have gone, yet I lingered, and looked at the pictures and casts, which the Sister talked about very readily.

"And this?" I said, pointing to the engraved head opposite the picture of the Cardinal.

"It is our holy father, the Pope, Pius the Ninth."

I started back involuntarily.

He looked a gentle, winning, pure-hearted man; yet, though the night-gown was absent, there was the stain of the sacrilege, and the universal "Father of the Church" hung beneath it all.

"I should like to see him," I said absently.

The nun had been watching my face, and was smiling.

"He is a good man—it could do you no harm. I had the blessing only a year ago."

"You have seen him then? Is he pictures like?"

"With the exception, that he is kinder and more gentle in his appearance, God be merciful to me then, and long may they form all the evil evil!"

"Sister, I thought a nun was always silent?"

"If I said, looking at her curiously. "How should you go to Rome?"

"The Sister of Charity, like the Jesuit priest, goes everywhere," she answered—"Saint Elizabeth's establishment sends nurses to the wars—even to the Crimea!" Number them there."

"—In all your wanderings, have you ever visited the Isle of Wight?" I asked.

"Often in fact!"

"The last visit dated to the month—October?"

She looked—and then she sighed.

"I [illegible] American myself."

"Yes!"

"Your name, then,"

She gave me her hand, and I took it kindly and looked into her face.

"I believe I had once you by name. I am sure it is now. Sister, years ago you were a young lady of Saint Paul's parish in the city of New York. Your father was a merchant, and you had a brother Frank, and a sister Mary. Do you remember a young lawyer who used to visit at your father's house, and [illegible]

"Hush! Not here, not here!" she said, with a sudden flush. "At two this afternoon, if you please."

"Why should you know that?"

"I'm more than a young bride. Your husband——"

"Oh, hush!" A look of agony passed over her placid features, and I had cut the heart to go on.

"In that party was a little child, not more than seven years old, who loved you very dearly, and whom you loved."

"Yes—I remember—poor little thing!"

"She was ill, and you watched her as if you had been her mother. She had a grateful heart, and never forgot you or your kindness. This is why that to-day, though she was puzzled at first, she recognized Mrs. Merchant in Sister Mary Francis of the Holy Cross."

"What! Are you little Mary?" She took my hands in hers with the bright smile of her old days, and kissed me tenderly.

"I never thought to see you again," she said. And then, as if my presence recalled all those whom she had been trying—God help her!—to forget, the tears filled her eyes, and she leaned upon the mantelpiece, and hid them with her hands.

"I am not cruelly, little Mary now," I said, playfully. "And if any one had told me I should meet you when I entered this hospital to-day, I should have thought them mad."

"No doubt—no doubt."

"But tell me, what brought you here.—When did you leave America?"

"Three years ago."

"And you have since become a Sister of Charity?"

"No. I belonged to the order before I left my home, and had completed my novitiate."

"Ah, dear Mrs. Merchant——"

"Hush, that name! I left it in the world behind me."

"We shall see one day, Sister. But are you happy here?"

She kissed the heavy crucifix that lay upon a bosom where I had once seen diamonds glittering.

"It matters little whether we are happy or not on earth, my dear child. He who would wear the crown there," and she pointed upward, "must be content to lie beneath the cross here, and sleeping or waking to bear it cheerfully, even as our dear lord has borne it before us."

"How changed you are!" I exclaimed. "I remember you so bright, and gay, and happy. You were like a bird flying and singing in the sunshine."

"I shall fly and sing again, then, one day but it will be in a fairer land than this.—But do not attribute the change to a convent life, as I imagine you are ready to do.—The world saddened me long before I found a shelter here, and made me old before my time. Believe me, my child, it can lay a heavier cross upon us than ever our Lord will do, and like the Pharisees, it will not lift its finger to ease us of our burden, while He himself assists us to bear what sorrow He has given us."

A bell rang in the passage as she spoke, and crossing herself, she knelt down and said a prayer. When it ceased, she rose and took my hand.

"That was the Angelus, and I recommended you to the care of our Lady as I said it. Now I must go. My time for watching in the wards begins in five minutes and I dare not be late. Obedience is one of the cardinal virtues in the Hospital of Saint Elizabeth."

"A tiresome one enough," I said, pettishly.

"Nay, it has been called the royal way to Heaven," and her face grew grave.

"May I come and see you again?"

"Yes. I shall see you for a moment when you bring our new patient to-day, but I can only talk to you about her then.—Come to me next Thursday at ten in the morning, and if I can get permission of the Reverend Mother, I will come down again to you here."

"And tell me more about yourself?"

"That is as may be," she said with a smile. "If her history will do you any good, you shall have it. Good-bye now, and God bless you. I shall pray for you each day."

She made the sign of the cross over me, and kissing her hand, as I had seen the nuns do after a benediction from a superior, I went away.

CHAPTER II.

It was many weeks before Mrs. Merchant would fulfil the half promise she had made. But one day as we sat in the private garden of the Hospital, during the hour of recreation, and listened to the chimes which were ringing from the belfry of the Protestant Church in the next square, she told me all.

She was but ten years older than myself, and at the time of which I had spoken of her, she was a gay girl just out from boarding-school, and married to a man who idolized her. She was handsome and he was twenty-eight—they were gifted with books and wealth and beauty, and lived as happy as [illegible]

They speak in that impossible land who portray of which most of us the happy enough to get a momentary glimpse in the morning of our lives. At the end of that time death and distrust came to take the place of confidence and faith through the intervention of one who could not bear to see them happy. The bonds strained—both were proud, and neither would stay the snapping of which they were guilty. Each meant to part, at last, that they who had loved each other, became as strangers, and [illegible] separated forever.

How he bore the story of such a sorrow can be told. The Lover and Poet of a husband can be wound [illegible] of those with very little wrath of passion [illegible] It is the gentlest sacrifice, which can be guaranteed to [illegible] the opening of the double wounds and a the gradual [illegible] hours, yet full [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] every day of our lives would [illegible] no one knows but [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ons of heroic mettle. Men qualified by nature and education, in the times "When Monarchs owned no sceptre but the sword, to foil a tyrant's and a bigot's bloody rage."

I admire the men of any age, and of any country who stands forth the champion of right, and in the hour of his country's peril jeopardizes his life for the rescue of those rights of which her citizens have been robbed by despotic power. I honor therefore those men raised up by providence who "pledged their treasure their sacred honor," for the deliverance of their country from the yoke of tyranny.

The Puritan of England and the Covenanter of Scotland, displayed in a different manner, the sublimities of the unconquerable spirit of liberty; and whenever England and the United States enjoy civil liberty, it is acknowledged by all, (except their hereditary foes,) they are indebted for it to their labors, their sufferings, and their blood. The spirit which animated the Puritan like the Phœnix of the ross still abides and revives, after the substance has withered and decayed.

"God" says an eloquent writer "would not permit that all the earth should be enslaved once, and to prevent it, He gave courage to multitudes of Christians in Britain that they might contend with the enlaved, inhuman monarchs of church power; and with a succession of fanatical or dotard Queens and Kings. They did so contend —blood was spilt, the continents felled, and liberty lived."

WALKER'S DYING SPEECH.

Prisoner in Trenton, of Henderson, the celebrated chief of filibusters, Mr. Wm. Walker, was judged and condemned in double-quick time by able to allege anything in defence but that he had a right to wage war against Central America because that republic had driven him out of Nicaragua.

Six days he was imprisoned in the same place that he had styled, when occupying Trenton, the "Commercial Department." In these six days of imprisonment he had ample time for thought, and sometimes seems to me contemplating his prison, and also on seeing the people that he had defeated and driven from their homes on the 6th of August treating him with the greatest benevolence and kindness.

Carried to the place of death and being ready to be executed, he begged leave to address the people in these few words—

"I declare myself to be a member of the Roman Catholic church. I declare that I have injured the people of Honduras to a great extent, being led to do so by the people of the Island of Roatan, who, after calling me, deserted me and left me to my fate. I ask pardon (as these poor men that accompanied me, for they are not guilty as I am. If my life can be of any benefit to society, I lay it down with the greatest readiness pardoning my judges, that I may be enabled to obtain my pardon in the next world."

These were his words, and with these the scene closed; it being worthy of notice that although the part of Trentillo was attacked ruthlessly by him, yet the people of the town plied him and in the whole crowd there was not one glad countenance.

Here is a new trait that, until yesterday, was wanting in the history of the world, but that hereafter will serve as a beacon to those who follow chiefs like Walker, who, in lieu of leading them to fortune, lead them to exile and imprisonment.

IMPORTANT FROM CUBA.

EXPEDITION OF TWENTY THOUSAND MEN FITTING OUT FOR MEXICO.

From the New Orleans Picayune,

Sept. 21.—We understand letters of the highest authority were received in this city by the Catawaba, from Havana, which leaves no room to doubt that something serious is pending between Spain and Mexico. They assert positively indeed, that an expedition of not less than 20,000 men is actually been fitted out in the city of Vera Cruz. And of this no secret is made.—Even the troops comprising the expedition, their regiments and companies, are mentioned. They are for the most part the acclimated troops of the island. Their places will be filled up by recruits at home and reinforcements from the Peninsula, the vanguard of which were daily expected.

The ostensible grounds of quarrel between Spain and Mexico have already been stated. The real object of the present expedition, however, if ever it should proceed to the Mexican coast, is armed intervention, looking to a permanent protection over the country, if not its ultimate acquisition.

* * * * * * *

We of course, look upon the whole scheme as Quixotic, and its ultimate accomplishment as impossibility. By the confession of all its destiny is that the flag of the United States shall ultimately be extended over Mexico. In the meantime, however, Spain may take advantage of our disinterestedness and indifference and do much that we should regret to see done. She has it in her power at least to crush for the moment the party which is favorably disposed to us and glad to the opposing party for a time a new lease of authority which she will not be slow to profit by. She already has thirty-six vessels of war in the Gulf, whose employment in such an enterprise would of all things be most agreeable to them and to her people. Others are on the way, and whatever be its object, whether to wage war with the Republic, to intermeddle therein in the name of peace, or to lend moral if not armed support to the reactionary faction, it is certain a formidable expedition will be sent from Havana the coming winter to the Mexican coast.

SPECIMENS OF YANKEE INDEPENDENCE.

Some people when they go from one place to another, calculate upon their luck in getting there through. Others count on their "pull," others on their talents (very few in number,) others on their impudence, and others on sheer head-thickness; but well Lord Renfrew it can be emphatically said that he counts on his courage. From Cincinnati to Pittsburg he rode the opulent son of two thousand dollars for a special train; but, while he gave in accordance with Republican aspects to another immediate and grandeur of ordinary men. The train which bore the Royal Highness had the extra night of the week. An engine specially detached accompanied the train to keep the track clear and put any impediments in the way aside. And would paralyze the ardour of the Yankee soul and delight the Prince and delight him.

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION.

ANOTHER GREAT VICTORY.

Forty Peter, Oct. 2.

The North American left Liverpool at 2.30 p. m. on the 29th, for Londonderry on the evening of the 21st ult.

AUSTRIA

All Austrian vessels of war were ordered to rendezvous on the 20th ultimo Island of Lissa in the Adriatic, consisting of 76 vessels, mounting 600 guns.

The Austrian protest against the invasion of the Roman States has been received.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says it confirms the general satisfaction, that Austria will not further at present attack Venetia be attacked. The protest, however, reserved in a defiant manner the right to send an army to Italy, and states that if Austria now abstains it is in order not to be disagreeable to certain Powers, but that she holds herself free to choose her own hour for attacking to re-establish.

Vienna journals announce the death of Prince Metternich.

SYRIA.

Military operations would commence in the first month.

It is reported that Fuad Pasha perpetrated further outrages.

Fuad Pasha, late Governor General at Damascus, Chanee Bey and Mustapha Bey, who betrayed Christians at Hasbeya and Ozaya Bey, who commanded the troops at Damascus during the massacres, were all shot at Damascus on the 5th.

Bombay mails of August 24th arrived. General news unimportant.

Commercial reports are unfavorable.—Cotton—piece goods lower. Produce dull and freights kept down thereby.

ITALY.

Considerable excitement is felt at Paris of a collision between the French troops in Rome and Garibaldi's legions.

There is a hope of more serious complications being avoided, chiefly founded on an expectation that the Pope intends shortly leaving Rome. The Sacred College is exerting its influence to induce him to seek an asylum in Spain or Austria. If the Pope departs and the French follow his example, Sardinia will at once occupy Rome.

It is reported that Goyon's forces will be increased to 20,000 men.

The Papal army has been increased to 50,000 men, but besides [illegible] army no longer exists, for the 4,000 men belonged to Lamoriere may already be reckoned Gen. Cialdini's prisoners.

The Herald says that the Papal army has been defeated, but not dishonoured.—[illegible] were an untrained [illegible] able army led by able commanders.

The Observateur says the result of the recent battle is to transfer to the King of Sardinia the whole of the Royal territory with the exception of Rome, Viterbo and Civita Vechia.

The foreign journals notice prominently the struggle between the civil and military leaders of the Italian revolution, and the subject is adverted to in several of the morning papers.

The Herald says that the fate of Italy is involved in the struggle between Cavour and Garibaldi.

The Times observes that both men mean the same thing, and are endeavoring to obtain the same object; but Cavour recognizes difficulties which have to be avoided, while Garibaldi believes he can ride down all obstacles, sword in hand. Garibaldi's impetuous system is admirable against his own countrymen, but Cavour will be indispensable to Italy as an antagonist for France and Austria.

Caserta, Sept. 18, via Leghorn.—It is expected that Capua will capitulate to-day.

Garibaldi has appointed Signor Safi pro-Dictator of Sicily.

Baron Brenier will leave Naples on Thursday next.

It is reported that Mazzini has arrived at Naples.

Garibaldi will leave to-morrow for Capua.

Turin, 20th Sept.—After the official publication of Cialdini's victory the city was en fete. The Illuminations were general.

The Journal Armaria of Florence has been seized for publishing articles insulting to the Emperor of the French.

Lamoriere's defeat will hasten the departure of the King of Naples from Gaeta.

The Herald's Paris correspondent is informed that a manifesto by the Pope, announcing his determination to withdraw from Rome, is already prepared.

The Times, in quoting the Turin letter of the 6th of September, says, if Garibaldi persists in attacking Rome while the French and the Pope are there, the government of Victor Emmanuel will repudiate the attack in concert with its allies, no matter what may be the consequences. The same letter also says that complete anarchy reigns in Sicily, and administrative disorder at Naples.

The battle of the 18th inst. between Lamoriere and Cialdini lasted six hours.

After the battle of the 18th, the greater portion of the Pontifical troops capitulated. The foreign troops will return to their respective countries.

Lamoriere, with a few horsemen, succeeded in reaching Ancona. Outside of Ancona there is not a single Pontifical battalion.

Many reports are in circulation in Paris to the effect that Napoleon would attend the Imperial meeting at Warsaw.

GREAT BRITAIN.

[illegible] says that "on the score of the defeat of Gen. Lamoriere, the English funds opened this morning at a further [illegible] improvement, which was steadily [illegible] throughout the day."

Money remains exceedingly abundant, notwithstanding the easy approach of the end of the quarter. No gold was bought by the Bank to-day.

The following official despatch reached Turin, Sept. 18th:—

Lamoriere with 11,000 men attacked to-day the position lately taken by Cialdini at Castle d'Asino. The fight was short but desperate, and the following results:—The position of Lamoriere's troops with the remainder of his troops at Ancona is garrisoned 5000 prisoners have been made, 3 pieces of artillery and a flag were taken. Among the prisoners of the enemy is one colonel. A convoy of 2,000 sick Papal troops has been sent to the hospitals at Ancona. The Papal army has ceased to exist. The Italian army has lost 1,000 men in killed and wounded. The Generals Zappi and Cialdini have been slightly wounded.

The Pope has issued a proclamation, declaring that he will join the Spanish troops at Rome, and begin a crusade against Victor Emmanuel.

The Congress between Garibaldi and the Piedmontese Government commenced.

The flag of Naples had exhibited the characteristic Union, exhibiting a series of stripes of the Piedmontese colors, a corresponding number of stripes of the Neapolitan colors, and in the centre the arms of the Kingdom of Naples.

It is reported that Victor Hugo had arrived at Naples.

Cardinal Sperra had been expelled from Naples by the Dictatorial Government.

It was positively asserted, notwithstanding official contradictions, that Napoleon sought an invitation to Warsaw at the Royal Meeting.

Rentes were advancing in France. The Rente was firm at 69f. 30c.

English news is unimportant.

There was a severe storm on the southern and eastern coasts, and some shipwrecks.

The weather was broken, but fine and promising.

There have been two failures in the trade—Wm. Archer & Sons of London, for £15,000, and Thos. Nelson, for £30,000.

Rio Janeiro letters announce the failure of the great house of Malli & Lemma, hide and cattle dealers, for nearly half a million sterling.

Cape of Good Hope mails to August 21st, have arrived in England.

Prince Alfred was at the Cape, where he met with an enthusiastic reception.

BY THE "VANDERBILT."

Rome, Sept. 22, 1860.

The Pope has sent to inquire the intentions of the Emperor Napoleon in reference to the Roman States.

The purport of the Emperor's reply is known, but his Majesty is said to have mentioned that France had not allowed Spain to interfere in favour of the Pope.

In the combat at Montefiascone seventy Pontifical soldiers were killed and wounded. Eight Irishmen are among the dead.

No news has been received from General Lamoriere. Great consternation prevails at Rome.

Paraguay, Sept. 20, p. m.

The columns of General Masi and the Chasseurs of the Tiber have entered Civita Castellana and occupied the fortress.—Sixty of the garrison were made prisoners.

Great enthusiasm prevails among the population.

Turin, Sept. 24.

The headquarters of Gen. Fanti are at Loretto. The siege artillery has been disembarked at the Sardinian camp, near Ancona.

The Opinione says:—Count de Vincenti and Signor Pallavicini have arrived from Naples. Count Vasconcelli has been to Naples on a mission to the Dictator.

Signor Pallavicini is sent here entrusted with a mission from the Dictator.

Turin, Sept. 25.

The Marquis de Pallavicini has been received by the King in private audience, but has not yet left Turin.

Rimini, Sept. 25.

After some hours' firing the garrison of the fortress of Santo Leo surrendered at discretion.

The Sardinian troops occupied the fortress yesterday at noon. Several officers and soldiers of the Sardinian army distinguished themselves in the attack.

The flying columns commanded by Brigneris have made 500 other prisoners.

FRANCE AND THE POPE.

The Constitutionel publishes an article signed by M. Bonifacy, on the influences which urge the Pope to leave Rome.

The Constitutionel says:—A very near future will approve us whether these influences will be victorious.

The same journal further says: It is impossible to ask that France should declare war against Sardinia. France will not extend her intervention beyond Rome, who do not otherwise she would recall herself suspected to Europe and odious to Constitutionel, in conclusion, expresses hope that the Pope may resist the [illegible] which are given to him through France.

THREE GAVAZZI.

On the [illegible] August, Father Gavazzi wrote to a friend in London:—"I am, indeed, the [illegible] of patriots, finding myself, after so many years, in the very field I longed for, [illegible] consequent of our civil liberties will be consequent of our civil liberties which I have [illegible] my Italy the religious always the dream of my [illegible] what so often I spoke in England, that [illegible] is no intervention [illegible] all arrive to crown in Victor Emmanuel to [illegible] Capitol our [illegible] constitutional [illegible] month after words, [illegible] Te Deum for [illegible] two Sicilies in the C[illegible] of Naples.—It is not unlikely that [illegible] desire, the [illegible] of [illegible] month or two [illegible] 6 will be fulfilled, by his assisting [illegible] Victor Emmanuel in the Capitol [illegible] as King of Italy.

Agricultural.

BENEFIT OF PREVENTING CATTLE AND HOGS EARLY IN THE SEASON.

We have recommended our rural friends to prepare [illegible] this year, on account of the great scarcity of grain in Western parts of Europe; it is probable that this deficiency must be supplied from the country. We notice that Lord Hill in Devon, a practical farmer, has early put forward [illegible] and [illegible] pay and keep it will be a long time before they will be fit for market, and it is much better to use cheap food such as grass, vegetables, roots, &c., for bringing them up to feeding point, than to waste corn for that purpose. The same remarks unhappily to cattle, they should be made as fat as grass can make them before they [illegible] put in for stall feeding. They should be fattened early in the season, although it [illegible] pay to hold them over until [illegible] grass and clover.—Tribune.

PLOWING IN WHEAT.

A farmer near Dunlap, C. W., (says a correspondent of the Germania Journal) has practiced plowing in both wheat crops for years, as follows: He prepares the land in the usual manner up to the time of sowing the manure; that is spread on the meadows early in September, the wheat sown on immediately, and both harrowed once over. He then plows under wheat and manure together, and leaves the land without further work—He says that the wheat so put in the fall invariably yielded one-third more than that sown in the ordinary manner, and that although it takes a longer time to make its appearance, it is never winter killed, nor feels later in ripening."—Shallow covered wheat is most liable to winter-kill; hence [illegible] advantage of drill sowing or plowing in.—Ed. Canadian Farmer.

STARTLING & RELIABLE DISCOVERY.

It is said that Mayor Thorne, of the paint factory at Middletown, has accidentally made a discovery which threatens to revolutionize locomotives. One of the factory hands, having thrown some liquid paint mixed in preparation into a flower bed occupied with white geraniums, the flowers have since made their appearance with petals as green as grass.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and new coatings many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half House in Canada.

GENTLY CHECK A CHILD.

[A child, when asked why a certain tree grew crooked, replied, "Somebody trod upon it, I suppose, when it was little."]

He who checks a child with terror,
Stops its play and chills its song,
Not alone commits an error,
But a grievous moral wrong.

Give it play and never fear it,
Active life is no defect;
Never, never, break its spirit,
Curb it—only to direct.

Would you stop the flowing river,
Thinking it would cease to flow,
Onward must it flow forever—
Better to ch it where to go.

Deacon Palmer's Family

A CONNECTICUT STORY.

The sound of the stage horn flowed in sweet, mournful currents in and out of the hollows, and the echoes among the hills caught them up and tossed them back and forth through the forest, and they ran in long silvery eddies up the turnpike, and over the meadows, and across the orchards, till they reached the ears and stirred the hearts of the quiet little village of Woodstock, whose farm houses sat in a valley at the foot of a long chain of hills, like a company of pilgrims gathered to worship before the shrine of a vast temple. It was just at sunset, and somehow these long, mournful minor tones seemed the fitting close of a day's service—that autumn day which arose on the mountains in garments of sunshine, and marched through the hours in beauty and rejoicing, a living "Glory to God!" the creator of its good and perfect gift.

But it was a day fraught with dread and foreboding to thousands of homes and hearts in the land, for the voice of war was abroad in the earth, and mothers have strained their brave sons for the last time to their bosoms, and seen them go forth to the battle, and husbands and fathers had laid aside the plow and the scythe, and shouldered their muskets, and taken their lives in their hands for the sake of freedom, and in the name of the God of battles.

So deep shadows lay on the quiet country thresholds of almost every home in New England that autumn day and almost every hearthstone was an altar where anxious loving hearts sent up a cry to God for their beloved. Mrs. Palmer, wife of Deacon Palmer, of Woodstock, stood in the wild, old-fashioned kitchen of the dingy, yellow farm house which she brought her husband on her marriage morning. She was an ample, motherly, pleasant-faced looking woman, whose whole physiognomy corresponded with the room. Strings of red peppers and rows of dried apples were festooned along the ceiling, while a swinging board fastened to the beam which divided the hall overhead, was burdened down with herbs and berries, hams, dried herbs, seeds, and a motely variety of other domestic wares.

Mrs. Palmer's life had stepped over its fiftieth summer, and her black hair was thickly sifted with gray, and there were lines about her forehead and the smile in her faded eyes had something sorrowful about it, for Mrs. Palmer had walked with grief many times; and of the ten fair boys and girls who had been gathered to her maternal heart, only two remained to her old age. It was a small family under the roof of the old gray homestead, whose blessed threshold was never darkened by the shadow of death.

Mrs. Palmer paused as her ear caught the faint echoes of the sweet horn, and she deposited half a dozen freshly-baked doughnuts in the pan on the table, murmuring to herself "Now, for all the world, if that isn't the mail coming in!—Who knows but what there may be some news of Reuben?"

Ah! if you had heard her voice linger on the name, you would have known she was his mother.

"I wonder if that boy'll take any sort of care of himself," continued the fond mother dexterously conveying several stripes of dough, and placing them in the large iron kettle which hung over the fire, filled with boiling fat, which eagerly snapped and sputtered at their intrusion.

"If there was a fray, he'd be sure to be foremost, for he always was poking his head into all sorts of danger, and never seemed to feel quite so content as when there was a chance of getting his neck off his shoulders!"

"I never could exactly see where he got his heroic-charum turn, for his father was always a sober-minded man; but it was amazin' how he'd be apt in to come out straight. I never had up any hope for the first ten years of his life, for fear he'll be brought home with broken limbs; but after he's gone through with what would a killed a dozen ordinary children, I kind o' gave him up. I considered he bore a charmed life.

"Poor fellow! I hope he won't get the rheumatiz campin' out nights, and they say they have to put up with fare such as we wouldn't have the face to offer a sport dog. I wish I could do up a pepper of three doughnuts for the boy, he al'ays was fond of 'em. Dear me! these ashes are beastly," dipping her large fat hands into the hollow fist; "but it al'ays frustrates me when I get to thinking of Reuben. I'm reminded sometimes of what Parson Hunter said for me: "Mrs. Palmer, you must not make an idol of him. He belongs to the Lord." I know it's true on Scripter, but I can't help thinkin' the Lord'll show mercy on my weakness 'case he's all I've got, and after a long struggle, I've given all the selfishness up to him; but my way. He'll hoard up his life long, and if anything should happen to him God knows it would break his poor old gray head's heart." Mrs. Palmer broke down here, and she sat on the old rocking chair, and wiped her eyes on the corner of the check apron.

Light mutterings of some old spoken-down fragments danced on the unknown ends of their sayings, and a pleasant-looking girl burst into the room.

Rebecca Palmer was twenty-one, and the sight of her beautiful young face was like a picture rejoicing the eyes. She was not beautiful but her cheeks were full of the glow of youth and the richness of perfect health.

"Well, child," said Mrs. Palmer, taking her bottle from the cruse. "You just bustle round spry, and get up supper. Your father and the men will come home clear tuckered out, for they've been fetlen trees all day, and we must get a hearty meal for 'em. You slice up some ham, and fry a dozen of eggs, while I fix up some short cake."

"Mother, did you hear the stage-horn," asked Rebecca, as she laid the cloth which she had spun with her own hands for supper.

"Yes, and I was kind of impressed there was news from Reuben."

"I wonder what keeps father so?" said Rebecca.

"Likely as not he's gone round to the tavern to learn if there's any tidings from the army.

Another half-hour throbbed itself away in the pulses of the great old-fashioned clock in the corner, and both the women had begun to grow alarmed at the deacon's prolonged absence, when they caught the click of the gate latch, and his heavy tread along the footpath.

They saw him stop, as usual, at the wooden trough at the well, and wash his hands there, and then he came into the kitchen.

"Why father," began Mrs. Palmer with little wifely admonition, "what has kept you so long? I ra'ly began to get scared about you."

"And the supper's about burnt to a cinder," added Rebecca, who was in something of a hurry to get the table cleared in time for singing school.

The deacon was a square-built, sun-browned man, with shaggy eye-brows and weather-beaten face. He came forward to the table with a slow, groping movement, which neither of the pre-occupied women noticed, and he cleared his throat before he spoke.

"I was detained a spell on some matter of my own;" and Mrs. Palmer and Rebecca at once concluded that he alluded to some bargain with a neighbor.

"Don't you see the chair there, father?" asked Rebecca; for the old man stood still as a statue before the table, though his daughter had just placed his seat at his elbow and now he sat down without speaking a word.

"Why husband I believe you've deaf to-night! You haven't taken your hat off," exclaimed Mrs. Palmer.

"Don't wife, don't," and then the old man laid his straw hat on the floor beside him.

The two women bent their heads reverently over the board, waiting for the deacon to invoke his customary blessings upon the meal, but no sound broke the stillness.

Mrs. Palmer glanced up at her husband—his head, too was bent over his plate, and a stream of candle-light falling on his face, revealed it to her full gaze.

"John something has happened to you to-night," she said, leaning forward, and breathlessly searching his face.

A deep, convulsive sort of groan heaved out of the old man's lips, and both the women grew white as they heard it.

"Oh, what is it, father? do tell us!" fluttered the frightened voice of Rebecca.

Mrs. Palmer rose and went to her husband, and laid her shaking fingers on his hard hand.

"Oh, John, it aint anything about Reuben?" She cried out the words as one might if a sword had struck suddenly into his heart.

Rebecca sat still at the table, her sweet face struck white with wonder and fear, and her brown eyes fastened on her parents, but now she sprang up, and drooped down on her knees at the deacon's feet; "Oh, father, do say it isn't Reuben!" and her voice was like her mother's.

The deacon opened his lips, but he could not speak. He took the hands of his wife and child, and covered them with his own trembling ones.

"Oh, Lord, have mercy upon us!" groaned the stricken man, and they knew.

Mrs. Palmer crept up to her husband, and whispered in a faint, broken voice, "Jest say my boy isn't dead, father. I can bear to hear anything else."

The deacon made no answer, but the great tears fell down his furrowed cheeks, and it was enough.

The tidings of the disastrous battle at Long Island, which closed the summer of 1776, had filled the land with mourning, for thousands of widows and orphans had been made in that terrible hour when so many brave Americans lay dead on the battle-field; and the news of the successful skirmish which took place on the following month near King's Bridge, in New York, was everywhere hailed with gladness and gratitude, and the little village of Woodstock bore its part in the general rejoicing on that autumn night when the stage first brought in the tidings.

The deacon's family was the only one in sorrow, for it was in this engagement that Reuben had fallen. He was a great favorite with the village, and every heart was filled with sadness when it thought on that bright handsome face lying stark and rigid on the battle field.

It was late that evening when Parson Hunter entered the stricken house, for friends and neighbors feared to intrude on its awful grief. But the tender-hearted old minister could not rest till he had carried the sweet balm of his love and faith to their hearts.

Parson Hunter was a tall, white haired old man, a fine representative of the staunch old Puritan minister, but beneath stern outlines and austerity of manner, built a heart whose all were fair and fragrant blossoms and golden fruits of charity and love—a heart in whose glowing and genial centre the angels loved to walk and talk with their shining forms, and of whose they were made in the kingdom of heaven."

The minister found the family in the kitchen, where we left it, utterly crushed down by grief, which expressed itself neither by moans nor tears.

Mrs. Palmer sat in a large arm chair before the fire, where her husband had placed her, the crimson light flattering over her face which seemed frozen to a stone, and her tearless eyes fastened in a blank gaze on the wall, and it was, perhaps that alarm for her reason or her life had somewhat converted the thoughts of the deacon and his daughter from the dead to the living; though it seemed to the minister that the last hour had done the work of years on both of them.

"My friends said the minister, speaking his deep, solemn tones, "I should not have come into your house of mourning to-night, feeling that the Lord could speak to your hearts better than I; but I remember it was 24 years this very month when you brought Reuben up to the altar to dedicate him to his God, and I felt that I had a right and title to come."

And these words unlocked Mrs Palmer's face. She turned suddenly towards the old man, as the vision of that Sabbath morning rose up and walked up it its long path of years and stood before her.

"I see him! I see him!" she sobbed out "with the little brown curls dancin' around his face, and the merry brown eyes blinkin' under them. My little Reuben, the sweetest baby that ever gladdened a mother's heart, and I was so proud of him, and I tho't God would spare him to be the staff of his mother's old age, because I had given all the others to him. Oh, Parson Hunter, it can't be true that I shall never look into his face again, never hear the sound of his voice—that he's lyin' off there on the battle field and his mother was not there to smooth down the hair from his forehead, or give him one from whom he looked up for her face the last time.

The old man sat still, overwhelmed by this mighty burst of a mother's agony. He closed his eyes for the tears filled them, and felt that for her he had neither help nor consolation.

"The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away;—blessed be the name of the Lord!"

The low, solemn tones of the preacher, scarcely above a whisper, fell into the hearts of the hearers, and stilled them, as man's never could, as only God's can. Blessed Bible words which we read over in the morning lesson and evening service, and never know the fullness and richness, the depths of meaning there are in them till some awful sorrow of our own touches the springs, and then we go in, and be! these old familiar passages are like stately pears rising on some pillars, and garnished and adorned with all fair and beautiful things; or they rise up before us like gardens filled with trees, whose branches are filled with gold and purple fruits, whose winds are full of the breath of sweet flowers, and whose silence is stirred by the voice of soft-falling waters, amid which the soul may walk and be refreshed.

Days passed on. A young man walked along the country road slowly and wearily, leaning upon a stout oaken staff; his face was ghastly white, and he wore the blue uniform of the "Continentals." He had a terrible wound in the right shoulder and had been left upon the battle field for dead. He opened the back gate softly and gazed all about him—at the woodpile in one corner of the great yard near the sunflower stalks, and the small quince trees which grew on one side of the old brown homestead of Deacon Palmer.

Suddenly the kitchen door opened, and Rebecca Palmer came out of the door with a tin basin in her hand, and the young man's heart leaped as he heard her say in her quick way:

"Never mind sprinklin' them clothes mother. I'll attend to it as soon as I've heated up a few of those winter pears to stew for supper," and he saw the light rapid figure bustle round the corner of the house to the old pear tree just at the edge of the pasture, which he remembered climbing so many times in his boyhood, and amid the branches of which he had gathered the birds' nests every fall.

He followed the quick figure stealthily, and stood still a moment just outside of the bars, and she did not see him, for her back was turned, and she had dropped down on the yellow grass and was searching amid it for the fruit which the wind had broken off.

"Becky, Becky, I say!"

She turned quickly, and as her eyes fell upon his face, a ghastly pallor came over hers. She covered it with a shriek, not loud, for it seemed to tie for very terror on her throat.

"Why Becky, do look up here! Now haven't you got a better welcome than this for your brother when he's come back from the dead like?"

But she recovered then down on the grass, and seemed not shivered like the leaves on the old pear tree.

"See here, now, what on airth ails you? If you take me for a spirit, just look up and I'll be able to convince you I'm flesh and blood yet."

He lifted her up with one arm, for she was too much betwixt fright and wonder to resist; but the old familiar heavy tones recovered her.

She lifted her face from her hands and looking into his face for a moment with a straining wild glance; then the glad truth broke into her heart, for the heard eyes had their old roguish glance, though they were set in a pale wasted face.

"Oh, Reuben, Reuben, I thought it was a ghost!" and she fell upon his neck with a wild sob of joy.

It was long before he could get her to talk coherently, she would throw her arms around his neck, and tugging him playfully, conversing such tender words over him between sobs and laughter as Reuben Palmer had not heard since he lay a babe in his mother's arms.

At last she grew calmer, and sitting on the old bench by the back door, with the head of the wounded soldier in her lap, she heard the story of his escape from the battle field, and his long illness in the hospital, and how he had been discharged, and had started for home, and how he had walked all the way, and how he had come to the back gate, because he wanted to see her first, and how he had watched her through the bars, and how he had meant to "hear up," when she came out with the basin, but she looked so pretty he couldn't help it.

And then both the young souls had sunk down on the grass and wept as though they were little children.

At last Rebecca rose up. "Oh, what will mother say? You must come right into the house, Reuben, only p'r'aps he'd better break it gently, for she's weakly now, and startled-like joy might kill her. Oh, there's father come home!"

And they saw the old Deacon come into the yard and alight from his horse, just before the barn-door, and remove the heavy logs of door from the animal's back, for the old man had just returned home from the mill.

"We'll go and tell him first. You just keep around the corner of the barn, and I'll break the news," cried Rebecca.

She came panting up to her father just just as he was leading the horse into the barn.

"Oh, say, father, I want to tell you something's happened!"

The old man turned and looked into the eager face of his daughter, and his son, standing a little way off, could see the change which the last two weeks had wrought in his face.

"Well, what is it my child."

"You'll be so glad, father, and yet—I can't tell it. Oh, Reuben, do come here!"

And he came out.

"Father!"

The vague superstitious which almost all country people hold at that period of ghosts who haunted their old haunts, and visits made by the dead to the living, at once suggested even to the well-balanced mind of the Deacon, the possibility of his son's spirit returning to him.

He turned white, as his child had just done, but he did not speak, and Rebecca cried out:

"Don't be afraid father. It isn't a ghost but Reuben and he wasn't dead as we supposed."

"Oh, Reuben, my own Reuben, the Lord be praised!"

And the father and son fell upon each other's neck, like Jacob and Joseph of old, and wept.

"We must break it to mother easy, children, or it'll surtin kill her for joy," said the old man, vigorously wiping his face with his pocket handkerchief.

So it was arranged that the father should go in and break the joyful tidings to his wife according to his best judgment.

The trio went up to the house; Deacon Palmer entered the kitchen, and Rebecca and Reuben stood just outside the door, where they could hear every words. Mrs. Palmer was slicing some apples into a wooden bowl. She did not look up as her husband entered; all these weeks she had gone on with her house-hold duties so carefully and assiduously as ever, but with a face which grew more pale and patient every day—more like the face over which the grasses grow and the winds will.

"Well, Becky," she said, "I couldn't make out what had kept you. You've been a heap of time hosin' for them pears."

All the life had gone out of her voice; it was as full of grief and patience as was her face.

"It's me, mother, not Becky. I've just got home, and I've heard good news."

"What kind of news, father?" with scarcely a faint stir of interest.

"Ahem! well this was from the army."

The old woman sighed. "Then the Lord give us another victory over our enemy."

"Wal not that exactly. It's somethin' that concerns us more—somethin' that will give you great joy, mother."

Poor old soul he was internally congratulating himself on the tact and discretion with which he approached the subject, but he could not keep a tone of triumphant gladness out of his voice, and he was not astute enough for a woman's quick perception.

"John and she, turning round and looking him full in the face—a look that fairly staggered him—have you heard anything about Reuben?"

"Wal, yes, it did concern him—" He broke down here. "Reuben come in and let your mother see for herself."

"Mother."

She gave one long, greedy look on his shadow fell over the threshold. She comprehended it all in that glance, and stretched out her arms as she rushed forward, but they only clutched at the air, for before she could gather him to her heart she had fallen on the floor. Her son that was dead was alive again, but the mother's joy was more than her heart could bear. But the color soon came back to the faded cheeks, and at eventide on that happy day was heard in good Deacon Palmer's house the voice of praise and thanking rising to Him who in His wisdom "taketh away," but in mercy "restoreth again."

KOSSUTH AND THE BIBLE.

A large Bible was presented to the great Hungarian patriot in London lately, by a member of British Indian. Upon receiving it Kossuth said: "I take it for no merit in my life that I am a religious man, not for any merit of mine, not because it is a necessity to every honest and thinking man, but because it is the most rich and fruitful source of those sentiments and those feelings which lead to happiness in the world to come. I shall value it because I take religion to be the most rich source of that consolation which I have wanted so often in my life. Being a religious man, and because religion is not only an enemy to superstition, intolerance and fanaticism, as on the other hand the friend to freedom. I really confess that it is from this great book that I have learned the principle of loving my neighbor as myself, and strength and courage to act in that sense which has always been the guide of my life. Judge from this book I gather the gift to me now presented, as the rock of every holden, and of which so many were also presented by my forefathers, and which I shall always keep and guard through his mother had tried to "bear up," every one who looked in her face could see that her heart was broken.

ODD PHILOSOPHY.

On Wednesday eight days, as two farmers met at Bridgegate Head, the one (Sandy, a Scotch lad) addressed his friend "Tammas," who was also a Scotch man Stewarton, with the following line of familiar words:—"Weel, Tammas, this blyther we find that there's been about Stewarton as weel's about Barns; aye, an' auld fools too; for who but fool wad venture the ferrine ob nic a day. Molly, my wife, was in unco pickle when I spoke o' guns, and telt me that this day's rain wad test Mr. Longmuir's embankments on the Annick, an' swall the Garnock frae bank to brae; but nae neath did I fear, nae here I see, or wat outside as onie neer-draw for the pease-scoope, but as dry within as a pillcault weel gitsewed wi' the sun." "Ye're unco kind," quo the Stewarton farmer, not a little pieced at being plainly called a fool, "but really, Sandy," said he, after a moment's hesitation, "this has been prodigious wet weather. You park—I mean you fiauld neere park o' pratoes to the west o' the burn—is green just like sauw aff a dyke, an' risin' a mauld, as if it was a slaughter house instead of a pratoe park ye'r approaching; it's ill tee faddom what's tae come oot o' this, but it needs nae learning tae see that if it doesna slacken a wee there'll no be muckle tae shake in the purse ee the profits o' this season, onee way." "The meanse; wan't the meanin' ye wee wantin' tae ken," said Sandy, confident in his astronomical attainments, "I'll nooe gie ye the meanin' if ye can but invent the cure. Weel, ye ken, this wee' is as reen as a furmest, an' rins on twa axles like a mill-wheel." "I've hard a' that afore," quo Tammas impatiently, "but has the roundness o' the axles onee thing tae dee wi' the wet weather I would like to ken. By my word se' ye'r makin yersel' what ye weese blate tae ca' me—a fool." "Hood, hand, just for a jiffy, an' I'll show ye hoo it is the case," returned Sandy, rather soothingly to his irritated friend. "Baith is concerned, an' the reason why comes oot. Ye ken the wee' has been runnin' roun' ever since the birth o' Adam, an' ablins a wee wink afore that tee, an' wi' the constant motio, one o' axles has grown a wee thing wore; weel, ye ken, the worn piece comes aye roun' about this time o' the year, and that's the reason we has sic wet weather about harist time. But Tammas, my dear Tammas, what still signify the loss o' a few pecks o' pratoes, when that axle swaps—for lord man it will be an unco splash, an' that is my way o' thinkin' will be the end o' a' the things." The arrival of a third party broke the spell Sandy's story had thrown over Tammas, and to discuss the subject at greater length, or let it drop for one of less consequence, they adjourned to the Eglinton Arms to hear if James Wilson had heard anything about the price of rye grass seed, and perhaps to taste the quality of his best Campbeltown

THE GOSPEL TRIUMPHING.

It is true that we often take desponding views of Christianity. It is aggressive, and it is progressing. We are indebted to Mr. Sharon Turner for a collection of statistics showing the advances the Church has made. Here is an abstract of his showing: There were Christian communicants in the

First Century,	500,000
Fifth "	15,000,000
Tenth "	50,000,000
Fifteenth "	100,000,000
Eighteenth "	200,000,000

True, there was one century, during the madness of the crusades and locking up of the Bible, after which there was a decrease. But take the past, and you have an advance of 5,000,000 each century, or 146 every day. Is there not really something inspiring in such a view? It is stated that actual statistics show, that during the last fifty years "the number of members in the Evangelical Churches in the United States has increased from four hundred thousand to three millions and a half, being an increase of eight-fold," while our population has increased only four-fold. So much for the oft-reiterated statement, that the growth of the Evangelical Churches has not kept pace with the growth of the population.—Western Watchman.

LYNCHING OF TWO HORSE-THIEVES AT FORT SMITH.

This afternoon, (Thursday, Oct. 4,) about 3 o'clock, a man named Martin H. Gilliam, alias, Wm. Owen, formerly of Jonesboro, Union County, Mo., was hung at this place for horse-stealing, in the presence of a large concourse of citizens.—He was arrested some weeks since, and an effort made to hang him, during which he jumped away from the rope, and was shot down while in the act of escaping. His wounds were serious, and medical treatment was afforded. As soon as his injuries would admit of his being removed, he was taken to the County Jail at Greenwood, whence he escaped last night, and to facilitate his flight, stole another horse, but was retaken the morning at Van Buren and returned to this place, where summary punishment was again determined on. He was led to a tree with the fatal noose adjusted round his neck fleeing no shape of escape he confessed his guilt, manifested contrition for his past deeds, sought forgiveness at the throne of mercy in a fleeting prayer, and earnestly called upon those present to be admonished by the sinful example before them. He was then strung up and the tragedy was consummated.

Scarcely had these proceedings ended when another prisoner was brought into town, charged with the same offence. He was arrested on the street, confessed the crime of which he was accused, and hurried to the fatal spot, and soon swung by the side of his brother in crime. The second victim was a Cherokee, half-breed, named Grant. The bodies will not be taken off to-morrow. The citizens have been somewhat greatly incensed against horse-thieves as of late their offences have been fearful and numerous, and the expenditure of lead on this occasion is to be clear and expensive.—*N. MR. EDITOR:—The following remarks (with no considerable authority left no doubt) and hoping to any further difficulties respect- [illegible] 16, as they are in the point at [illegible] Problem 9 [illegible] says "although negative values of the unknown quantity will satisfy the equation from which they are derived, any such value is inadmissible upon solution of the question of which that equation is the algebraic expression, when the connection of the question is taken in its plain ordinary meaning"—Thomson's Algebra, page 262.

The following problem is taken from Colburn's algebra, page 181. It is required to find a number such that if to it's second power 9 times itself be added, the sum will be equal to three times the number less 5. "The values are —1 and —5, both negative. This shows that these conditions cannot be answered." Here the author tells us that this question cannot be answered, notwithstanding the answer here obtained is geometrically correct, for 52 (9x—5)=—— 20 and 3x—5—(5)=—20 the other value will also prove. Mr. Stratton might as well contend that this problem is possible as to contend that problem 16 is possible. The circumstance of negative values alone answering the conditions of the problem, shows that the problem cannot be answered.

A clergyman in Connecticut was reading to his congregation the beautiful and poetical psalm of David, where he says, "Mercy and Truth are met together; Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other." The Prince's Progress.

THE PRINCE IN NEW YORK.

New York, Oct 13.

The Herald, Lane arrived at Castle Garden at 2.30. One of the steamers left the trip was a race with the yacht Arrow, which completely outstripped the latter.

The Prince came up a good part of the way on the deck of the cutter, and had a good view of the harbor. His horses were in readiness at Castle Garden, where he landed and the reception took place, by the Mayor and Council. About three o'clock the Prince drove out of the Garden, and immediately on the departure of the Prince from Twin, the Mayor delivered to the Prince the following address:

To his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales:

SIR—Had I known that you would honor us with a visit to the Empire City, I should have proposed to you to make your home, and I am sure that the hospitality of the people would have been extended to you in a manner worthy of the occasion. But as you have only given us a few hours notice of your intended visit, I can only welcome you to the city, and express the hope that you will carry away with you a favorable impression of the people of the United States, and that the friendly relations which now exist between the two countries may be perpetuated.

The Prince replied as follows:

I thank you for your address, and for the kind manner in which you have received me. I am very glad to have had an opportunity of visiting your city, and I hope that the friendly relations which exist between the United States and England may be perpetuated.

The Prince then entered a carriage with the Mayor, and was driven to the Metropolitan Hotel, where he remained for a short time, and then proceeded to the Academy of Music, where a grand ball was given in his honor. The Prince left the Academy at 2 o'clock, and returned to the Metropolitan Hotel, where he retired for the night.

The Prince left the Metropolitan Hotel at 10 o'clock this morning, and proceeded to the Battery, where he embarked on board the Jersey City ferry boat, which had been handsomely decorated for the occasion, and proceeded to Jersey City, where the Prince was received by Governor Newell, and escorted to the depot, where a special train was in waiting to convey him to Philadelphia.

They soon expired for want of followers, and for 600 years there was a blank, (from 1150 to 1522) when the Anabaptists, of Germany, appeared, who were a head of Socialists or Mormonites, believing in community of goods and wives, and visions and empire, which however they very summarily lost by a touch of the Magistrate's sword. THE PETERBOROUGH BAPTIST CHAPEL.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Having learned that there is some misapprehension among many of our townspeople in regard to our apparent discourtay towards Mr. Gilmour, on the first Sabbath of October, in refusing him the use of the Baptist Chapel in Peterborough, we deem it due to ourselves and our fellow citizens to state the following plain facts in explanation.

1st. It is well known that upwards of five years ago the Church decided that none should be admitted to the Lord's Table except those who had been baptised on a profession of their faith in Christ, so that this practice should be a true exponent of their principles. In consequence of which Mr. Gilmour was offended, and requested a letter of dismissal from this Church to unite with the Church in Smith, which said letter he received in presence of the Church, while at the same time we all regretted this hasty act of Mr. Gilmour.

2nd. That Mr. Gilmour deeded to the Baptist Church of Peterborough, conducted on congregational principles, the property [illegible] which can easily prove that the Church has never deviated from said order. After the deed was signed, sealed, and witnessed, it was left in Mr. Gilmour's possession for safe keeping, but through neglect the deed was never registered.

3rd. We think Mr. Gilmour, contrary to all principles of equity, took advantage of this neglect, refused to give up the deed to the Church, and has actually deeded the property to other men, without any reference to the proper owners of it; and by this act he intends to deprive the church of their property.

4th. We have every reason to think that Mr. Gilmour's announcement that he would preach in our Chapel was a step in his plan to take our property from us.

5th. Mr. Gilmour knew that his demand for the keys of the Chapel would not be complied with until the question of ownership of the Church property was decided. He got a notice of this three days previous. Yet he went to the Chapel door on Sabbath, with his friends, for the purpose, as we believe, of exciting sympathy, for his supposed persecution or ill treatment by the Church.

The action of the Church was meant only as a business precaution until the questions raised by Mr. Gilmour's conduct, in regard to the property, are decided.

Peterboro', Oct. 17, 1860.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I write to say that I never thought so highly of Jury trials as I do just now. The case of Rogers v. Dickson, for example, seemed at first unreasonable, but when it is known that Rogers is bound to supply water to his tenants, he is clearly entitled to as much damages as will relieve him. Mr. Dickson can claim the same against those above him; and this is fair, for the river should be kept clear. The case of Edmison v. Stephenson also is honorable to the jury, whose business is to balance the law and bring it to equity when it is unequal. The law as it stands was never designed for a new country such as this, where two neighbours making a clearance for forty years may never know their boundary exactly to the end; and would it be justice or reason that because the one cleared part of his neighbour's land thirty years ago accidentally, and the other only 10 years ago, that the first mistake shall be rewarded and the latter punished. Had Edmison wilfully allowed his land to lie waste forty or fifty years as a trap, and then on some old musty deed hid away for a generation, chopped his bonds on the land and all that was on it, after perhaps half a dozen tenants had occupied it, because some defect of title gave the opportunity for such a foxy trick, I could appreciate the use of such law. But in the present instance the law would be absurd. I am sorry to see a neighbour dragged to such a shabby proceeding, and rejoice to see a Jury so clear-headed as to protect the property of the whole community against legal chicanery. I trust our Judiciary will ever preserve the same equal mind from to meet every similar case with equal justice.

LATEST from EUROPE.

BY THE NORTH BRITON.

AUGMENTATION OF THE FRENCH ARMY AT ROME.

Father Point, Oct. 11.

The steamship "North Briton" passed here this afternoon. She has 42 cabin and 153 steerage passengers. She experienced a continuation of heavy westerly gales to the 7th, and had a very heavy gale from the eastward, and a dense fog in the vicinity of Belle Isle. She was compelled to steam to the eastward for twenty hours. On Monday the 8th inst., at 6.45 p.m., she sighted Belle Isle.

Londonderry, Friday. — The Dowager Duchess of Saxe-Cobourg Gotha, mother of Prince Albert, died on Monday.

The Cologne Gazette publishes Lord John Russel's note to the British Minister at Turin. He expresses fear that an attack against the Roman States and Kingdom of Naples may lead to an attack on the possessions of Austria in Venetia. If the King of Piedmont was to attack a nation with which he has promised to live in peace and friendship, Italy would again be exposed to all the chances of uncertainty.

A protest of the Pontifical Government to the official journal of Rome publishes a formal protest of Cardinal Antonelli against an invasion of the Papal States. It is addressed to the representatives of all the foreign powers at Rome, and dated 18th inst.

On the 25th a report reached Turin that the Piedmontese army had entered the Patrimony of St. Peter, and that the French were concentrating at Rome and Civita Vecchia.

A formal order has been given to the Piedmontese commander not only to avoid any conflict with the French, but even any discussion on any point whatever with the French commander.

When the Senate and Chambers meet on Tuesday next they will receive a communication from the Government. As yet the greater portion of deputies show a disposition to support the Ministry, but in political assemblies on opposition often starts up unexpectedly.

Once Ancona taken—and it cannot hold out—Franti's army will concentrate upon the frontier of Naples, and will cross it at the first call of the population.

The general opinion at Turin is that if Garibaldi does not succeed in taking Gaeta, Franti's army will do it, but this is only a rumour.

It is said that the Sardinian Government receives from a portion of Garibaldi's troops assurances of devotion to Victor Emmanuel.

NAPLES.

The check of Garibaldi before Capua is completely confirmed.

It is said at Turin that the Dictator was so confident of taking Capua that he had given orders for preparing illuminations at Naples.

It was reported at Turin on Monday that Garibaldi had taken away the command of the fleet from Admiral Persano. The gracious gift of that fleet to Piedmont annoyed the party of action.

FRANCE.

The Herald's Paris correspondent says that another division of infantry is to be sent to Rome by the end of the week. The French garrison will then be raised to 20,000 men.

BY THE "AFRICA."

THE POPE'S ULTIMATUM.

DEFEAT OF THE GARIBALDIANS.

New York, October 11.

The Africa has 148 passengers.

The Sardinians are reported to have carried on siege operations at Ancona. Notwithstanding the desperate resistance of the garrison they took Fort Dellegrage.

Victor Emmanuel would leave for Florence and Bologna on the 29th.

It was asserted that the Pope's ultimatum for France threatens that he will quit Rome at once unless France interferes to stop the progress of the Sardinians. A majority of the cardinals are reported to have recommended his departure.

The repulse of the Garibaldians at Capua is finally confirmed. One account says they lost 400 killed and wounded and 300 prisoners. Their positions were nevertheless maintained, and the attack renewed in force. The Kings troops are reported to number 50,000 and he is determined to show fight.

Garibaldi's Ministry at Naples had resigned on account of the preponderance of bersaine. Signor Comfort was about to form a new ministry professing extreme opinions.

It was reported that Lamoriciere after his late defeat returned to Ancona with a considerable number of troops.

The text of Lord John Russell's warning to Sardinia not to attack Venetia is published.

He is in perfect health, and last week was to preside over the annual meeting of the National Society for the Promotion of Social Science at Glasgow. The noble lord was born on the 19th September, 1778. He was admitted an advocate of the Scottish bar in 1800, was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1808, was appointed Attorney-General to Queen Caroline in April, 1820, and was Lord Chancellor from 1830 to 1834 in Earl Grey's Government.

—GRANDVIEW DUMESNIL.—Le Journal de Quebec (Ministerial) acknowledges receipt of despatch from Riviere du Loup to the purport that Mr. Lemieux had a majority of 227 votes on the first days polling (the 3rd inst.). About a year since a gentleman in the interior of Wisconsin became insane, and was sent to the Lunatic Asylum at Madison in that state. He was a physician by profession, and was a gentleman of superior cultivation and remarkably prepossessing in appearance. He was about thirty years old. Some six weeks ago he escaped from the Asylum and went to Chicago. There he encountered an old friend, who loaned him quite a sum of money, having no suspicion of his insanity. With this money he supplied himself with new and elegant clothing, and started for Laporte, Indiana, a thrifty village on the line of the Michigan Southern Railroad. He remained there long enough to win the affections of a young and wealthy widow, and was married to her. During the brief courtship he exhibited no signs of insanity, but shortly after his marriage he commenced conducting himself in a manner which startled and shocked his wife and her friends.

Among other mad fancies he believed he was a sheep, and insisted on crawling around on his hands and feet, bleating in the most absurd manner. He would fancy himself a rattlesnake, and make frantic attempts to bite members of his household. The unhappy lady, at length worn out with watching him and endeavouring to restore his reason, made preparations to sending him to the Asylum in Indianapolis. But as is frequently the case, insanity had sharpened his wits, and he cunningly escaped.

We next hear of him in Syracuse, N.Y., where he actually purchased a block of buildings. The necessary papers were made out, and he was to call the next day with the money. He was to pay an outrageous sum for the property, and it is said the parties with whom he made the bargain chuckled vastly over the propitious wind that had blown them so profitable and fresh a subject. But they saw no more of him. The lunatic started westward. At Buffalo he bargained for an immense amount of corn, to be delivered in New York city, and then proceeded to Cleveland. He arrived here last week, and endeavoured to negotiate for some property on Kinsman street, but he talked so absurdly that the parties with whom he had interviews refused to trade with him.

Meanwhile his friends, and particularly his wife, in Wisconsin, (for he has a wife and two children in that state) were making every effort to ascertain his whereabouts. They traced him from Syracuse, and from there to this city. His brother arrived here on Saturday morning last, but found that the lunatic had left on the previous evening train for the West. He followed on Saturday morning. At Toledo he learned that he had gone West on the Michigan train, and he perseveringly continued the search. At Adrain he found and captured him, and took him home.

When not in his rabid fits few would discover the unfortunate man's true condition. He would make very absurd propositions, and offer [illegible] sum for property that hit his fancy, but he would do so in so candid and captivating a manner as to in most cases disarm suspicion.

INTENDED SACRIFICE OF 2000 NEGROES.

The King of Dahomey was about to make an immense sacrifice of human life to the memory of the late king, his father.—The West African Herald, of the 13th ult, referring to the matter, says:—

"His Majesty Badahung, King of Dahomey, is about to make the 'grand custom' in honor of the late King Gezo. Determined to surpass all former monarchs in the magnitude of the ceremonies to be performed on this occasion Badahung has made extensive preparations for the celebration of the grand custom. A great pit has been dug, which is to contain human blood enough to float a canoe. Two thousand persons will be sacrificed on this occasion. The expedition to Abeakouta is postponed, but the king has sent his army to make some excursions at the expense of the weaker tribes, and has succeeded in capturing many unfortunate creatures. The young people among these prisoners will be sold into slavery, and the old persons will be killed at the great custom.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. — Unnecessary torture—Palpitation of the Heart.—The bleeding, blistering, salivating and torturing method of the modern treatment of disease tends to the distraction rather than the preservation of human life. Physicians have a certain routine prescribed for their modus operandi from which there is no departure, the laws of the Medes and Persians that confines men to peculiar dogmas on penalty of exemion. Untramelled by particular rules, Holloway's system on the contrary is based on the simple laws of nature. Palpitation is often the effect of Indigestion, disorders of the stomach or nervous affections. By their action on the stomach and nerves the Pills remove the cause and effect a radical cure.

FARM WORK.

When the harvest is complete, the first work should be a general clearing up and improvement of the fields for next year's cultivation. Draining, stone-pulling, removing stones, cutting left hedge rows, re-claiming waste land, or fencing, will profitably employ many days on most farms. Now, too, while the mucky deposits are comparatively dry, there is opportunity to secure material for manure to be worked over at leisure.

The roadsides where noxious weeds are ripening their seeds should be neglected no longer. The turf that may be collected whilst plowing out the weeds, will, if added to the manure heap more than repay the labor. Such labors will fully occupy the time before fall ploughing commences.

Barns, sheds and other buildings where hay and grain are stored should have free ventilation. Repair whatever is necessary to exclude rain. Keep the barn floor free from "scatterage." Thresh out and clean gleanings from the grain fields.—Exclude fowls from the floor of the hay mow—they find nothing to the abatement of the winter feed. Construct proper drains to carry off the wash of the yard to the manure cistern, or to distribute it over the fields—the roadside is fertile enough without enriching it from this source.

Fences—Erect new lines of permanent fences, using stones from the land if they can be found. Remove those around which hedge roots have sprung up, if the bushes can not be subdued otherwise.—Keep all in good repair, especially about pastures.

Grain is safer when thrashed and stored in the bin, than exposed to the depredations of rats and mice. Thresh early, and market as soon as remunerating prices are offered. Secure granaries from vermin. If weevil appear, fumigate with sulphur.

Insure barns filled with the year's produce and other outbuildings as well as the dwelling. A single stroke of lightning may otherwise sweep away the whole.

Muck—Draw out as large a quantity as can be used in connecting with stable manure, and let admixing with the drainage of the stables, cattle yards and sinks. Store it in a heap near the barn, to be used as wanted. Exposure to sun and air will prepare it for use.

Pastures—Allow no fields to be fed too closely. Pastures are 'run out' quickly by this process—unprotected roots are burned up during drouth.

Swine—Those kept in the pens should have grain sufficient to keep them growing and to prepare for early fattening. Late pork usually brings less per lb., and requires more feed to make it. Allow them a liberal amount of green food. Pen vines with the fruit, are much relished by them.

Insects—Watch are busy in the apple and peach trees. Examine frequently for their marks, and destroy them. Late caterpillars should in many sections, and the second crop of many insects infests the branches and leaves. Apply whale oil soap and other suitable remedies.—American Agriculturist.

TREE-PLANTING.

Have you never heard of the student who on being told that the crow would sometimes live a hundred years, bought a young crow to try the experiment? Yes, indeed, we have heard of him—the irony is considerable—and of Dr. Johnson's grave about the frightful interval between the seed and the timber. Still, we say, plant trees; they who plant at once, instead of wasting their breath in selfish complaints of the shortness of life, find luxuriant foliage waving over them much sooner than they expected.—But, whether you live to see the maturity of your trees or not, be benevolent enough to plant for posterity. Transmit to your children the inheritance of rural beauty received from your fathers, greatly augmented. By all means plant, and plant well, and the result will overpay the labor. And let not your work end with planting. Feed your trees from year to year with generous food and guard them from injury. What joy may you have in seeing the success of your labors while you live, and in leaving behind you, to your heirs or successors, a work that many years after your death shall record your love to your country! If you have country homes to embellish, be content with simplicity. Remember that a great establishment is a great care, and the proprietor is apt to become a great slave to it. Let your dwellings be marked with what painters call "repose." Make them the abodes of comfort and refined enjoyment, places which will always afford you agreeable occupation, but not oppress you with care.

TO PROTECT A SHINGLE ROOF FROM FIRE.

The editor of the Albany Knickerbocker says that a wash composed of lime, salt and sand, or wood-ashes, put on in the ordinary way of white-washing, renders the roof 50 fold more safe against taking fire from cinders, or otherwise in case of fires in the vicinity. It pays the expense a hundred-fold in its preserving influence against the effect of the weather. The older and more weather-beaten the shingles, the more benefit derived.

☞The California papers report that some of the pear trees in that state, of the Bartlett variety, have two distinct crops of fruit this year. The trees blossomed in April and July. The pears of the first crop, at the first of September, were large, weighing eight or nine ounces each; the second crop then weighed about two ounces.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation; indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by depositions from the blood of scrofula or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, degrades the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumptive which abbreviates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the renovation of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, &c. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, ULCERATIONS, OPHTHALMY and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so compounded that disease within the range of their action can readily withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human system, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitality. As a consequence of their operation, the invalid who is tortured down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or capacity restored by a remedy at once so simple and startling.

Not only do they cure the every day complaints of every body, but the many dangerous and fatal disorders of society. The agent below named is supplied to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Worms, Indigestion, Piles in need of Medical Treatment of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So widely is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored to health and comfort by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and wherever its virtues are known, the public no longer need to be informed where to look for relief. Hence it should be employed for the cure of every affection of the kind to be expected to overcome, and where

ALBION HOTEL,

MONTREAL.

L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to any the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

THE LITTLE GIRL THAT MEETS ME.

There's a little girl that meets me,
And with laughter ever greets me,
And to kiss her oft entreats me
As I stray
'Long the path of life so dreary,
Where the saddened heart, and weary,
Shades the sunlight, shining near me,
On my way.

She has eyes as blue as Heaven;
(Only aged about eleven;)
But unto her God has given
Such a heart,
That forever she is singing
And her sweet voice ever ringing,
Beauty o'er the rapt heart bringing,
Sweet as art.

With her sunny hair so curly;
With her teeth, so white and pearly,
I have met her late and early
By the way.
And I take her hand and press it
In pure love, just to caress it—
"Pretty little hand—God bless it!"
I do say.

May the world smile kindly on her,
Benedictions fall upon her,
Angels be her guard of honor
As she goes
Through this world of ours singing,
Peace to troubled spirits bringing,
No grief her pure heart wringing
With its woes.

May the sweetest harp in Heaven—
Brightest crown that e'er was given,
Where the waves of life are driven
—not the throne—
Echo to her dainty finger,
'Pon her pure brow ever linger,
While each angel be a singer
Calling home!

THE PEDLER'S PRIZE.

A cold winter's night found a stage load of us gathered about the warm fire of a tavern bar-room of a New England village. Shortly after we arrived, a pedler drove up and ordered that his horse should be stabled for the night. After we had eaten supper we repaired to the bar-room, and as soon as the ice was broken the conversation flowed freely. Several anecdotes had been related, and finally the pedler was asked to give us a story as men of his profession were generally full of adventures and of anecdotes. He was a short thick-set man, and somewhere about forty years of age, and gave evidence of great strength. He gave his name as Lemuel Vineys and his home was in Dover, New Hampshire.

"Well, gentlemen," he commenced, knocking the ashes from his pipe and putting it in his pocket, "suppose I tell you about the last thing of any consequence that happened to me. You see I am now right from the far West, and on my way home for winter quarters. It was about two months ago, one pleasant evening, that I pulled up at the door of a small village tavern in Hancock County, Indiana. I said it was pleasant—I meant it was warm, but it was cloudy and very likely to be dark. I went in and called for supper, and I had my horse taken care of, and after I had eaten I sat down in the bar-room. It began to rain about eight o'clock, and for a while it poured down good, and it was awful dark out doors.

Now, I wanted to be in Jackson early the next morning, for I expected a load of goods there for me, which I intended to dispose of on my way home. The moon would rise about midnight, and I knew if it did not rain I could get along very comfortably through the mud after that. So I asked the landlord if he could not see that my horse was fed about midnight, as I wished to be off before two. He expressed some surprise at this and asked me why I did not stop for breakfast. I told him I had sold my last load about all out, and that a new lot of goods was waiting for me at Jackson, and I wanted to be there before the train left in the morning. There was a number of people sitting around while I told this, but I took little notice of them; one only arrested my attention. I had in my pocket a small package of placards, which I was to deliver to the Sheriff of Jackson, and they were notices for the detection of a notorious robber named Dick Hardhead. The bills gave a description of the person, and the man before me answered very well to it. He was a tall, well-formed man, rather slight in frame, and had the appearance of a gentleman, save that his face bore those cruel marks which an observing man cannot mistake for anything but the index of a villainous disposition.

"When I went to my chamber I asked the landlord who that man was, describing the suspicious individual. He said he did not know him; he had come there that afternoon, and intended to leave next day. The host asked why I wished to know, and I simply told him that the man's countenance was familiar, and I merely wished to know if I was acquainted with him. I resolved not to let the secret out, hurry on to Jackson, and there give information to the Sheriff, and perhaps might reach the inn before the villain had left; for I had no doubt in regard to his identity.

"I had an alarm watch, and having set it to give the alarm at one o'clock, I went to sleep. I was aroused at the proper time, immediately got up and dressed myself.—When I reached the yard I found the clouds all passed away and the moon was shining brightly. The hostler was easily roused, and by two o'clock I was on the road. The road was deep and my horse could not travel very fast, yet it struck me that the beast made more walk than there was need of, for the cart was nearly empty.

"However, on we went, and in the course of half an hour we were clear of the village. At a short distance ahead lay a large tract of forest, mostly of great pines. The road led directly through this wood, and as near as I can remember, the distance was 12 miles. Yet the moon was in the east, and as the road ran nearly west, I should have light enough. I had entered the woods, and had gone half a mile when my waggon wheels settled with a bump and a jerk into a deep hole. I uttered an exclamation of astonishment, but that was not all. I heard another exclamation from another source!

"What could it be? I looked quickly around, but could see nothing. Yet I knew that the sound I heard was very close to me. As the hind wheels come up, I felt something besides the jerk of the wheels.—I heard something tumble from one side to the other of my waggon, and I could also feel the jar occasioned by the movement.—It was simply a man in my cart! I knew this on the instant. Of course I felt puzzled. At first I imagined some poor fellow had taken this method to obtain a ride; but I soon gave this up, for I knew that any decent man would have asked me for a ride. My next idea was that somebody had got in to sleep, but that passed away as quickly as it came, for no man would have broken into my cart for that purpose. And that thought, gentlemen, opened my eyes. Whoever was in there had broken in.

My next thought was of Mr. Dick Hardhead. He heard me say that my load was all sold out, and of course he supposed I had some money with me. In this he was right, for I had over two thousand dollars. I also thought he meant to leave the cart when he supposed we had reached a safe place, and then either creep over and shoot me, or knock me down. All this passed through my mind by the time I had got a rod from the hole.

"Now, I never make it a point to brag of myself, but I have seen a great deal of the world, and I am pretty cool and clear-headed under difficulty. In a very few moments my resolution was formed. My horse was now knee-deep in the mud, and I knew I could slip off without noise. So I drew my revolver—never travel in that country without one—I drew this, and having twined the reins about the whip stock, I carefully slid down into the mud, and as the cart passed on I went behind it and examined the hasp.

"The door of the cart lets down, and is fastened with a hasp, which ships over a staple and is then secured by a paddlock. The padlock was gone, and the hasp was secured in its place by a bit of pine, so that a slight force from within could break it. My wheel-wrench hung in a leather bucket on the side of the cart, and I quietly took it out and slid it into the staple, the iron handle just slipped down.

"Now I had him. My cart was almost new, made in a stout frame of white oak, and made on purpose for hard usage. I did not believe any ordinary man could break out. I got on to my cart as noiselessly as I got off, and then urged my horse on, still keeping my pistol handy. I knew that at the distance of half a mile further I should come upon a good hard road, and so I allowed my horse to pick his own way through the mud. About ten minutes after this I heard a motion in the cart, followed by a grinding noise as though some heavy force were being applied to the door. I said nothing, but the idea struck me that the villain might judge and shoot up through the top of the cart at me, so I sat down on the footboard.

Of course I knew now that my unexpected passenger was a villian, for he must have been awake ever since I started, and nothing in the world but absolute villainy would have caused him to remain quiet so long, and then start up at this particular place. The thumping and pounding grew louder and louder, and pretty soon I heard a human voice.

"Let me out of this," he cried, and he yelled pretty loud.

"I lifted up my head, so as to make him think I was sitting in my usual place, and then asked him what he was doing there.

"Let me out, and I will tell you," he replied.

"Tell me what you are there for," said I."

"I got in here to sleep on your rags," he answered.

"Then you must stay there to the end of my journey," I replied.

"Let me out, or I'll shoot you thro' the head," he yelled.

"Just at that moment my horse's feet struck the hard road, and I knew that the rest of the road would be good going. The distance was 12 miles. I slipped back on the footboard and took the whip. I had the same horse then as I've got now—a tall stout, powerful bay mare—and you may believe there's some go in her. At any rate she struck a gait that even astonished me. She had received a good mess of oats, the air was cool, and she felt like going. In fifteen minutes we cleared the woods, away we went on a keen jump. The chap inside kept yelling to be let out.

"Finally he stopped, and in a few minutes came the report of a pistol—one—two—three—four, one right after the other, and I heard the balls whiz over my head. If I had been on my seat, one of these balls if not two of them, would have gone through me. I popped up my head again, and gave a yell, and then a deep groan, and then I said, 'Oh, God save me! I'm a dead man!' Then I made a scuffling noise, as though I were falling off, and finally settled down on the foot-board again. I now urged up the old mare by giving her an occasional poke with the butt of the whip, and then peeked at faster than ever.

"The man called out to me twice more pretty soon after this, and as he got no reply he made some tremendous efforts to break the door open, and as this failed him, he made several attempts upon the top. But I had no fear of his doing any harm, for the top of the cart is framed in with dove-tails, and each sleeper bolted to the posts with iron bolts. I had made it so that I could carry heavy loads there. By-and-bye, after all else failed, the scamp commenced to holler when to the horse, and kept it up until he became quite hoarse.—All this time I kept perfectly quiet, holding the reins firmly, and kept poking the beast with electricity.

"We were not an hour in going that 12 miles. I hadn't much fear—perhaps I might tell the truth, and say that I had a good pistol, and more than that my passenger was safe; yet I was glad when I came to the old barrel factory that stands at the edge of Jackson's village; and in ten minutes more I hauled up in front of the tavern, and found a couple of men in the bars cleaning down stage horses.

"Well, old fellar, said I, as I got down and went around to the back of the wagon: 'you had a rich good ride hadn't ye?'

"Who are you?' he cried, he kind of swore a little, too, as he asked the question.

"I'm the man you tried to shoot,' replied I.

"Where am I? Let me out;' he yelled.

"Look here; we're come to a safe stopping place, and mind ye my revolver is ready for ye, the moment you show yourself. Now, lay quiet!

"By this time the two hostlers had come up to see what was the matter and I explained it all to them. After this I got one of them to run around and rout out the Sheriff, and tell what I believed I'd got for him. The first streaks of daylight were just coming up, and in half an hour it would be broad day-light. In less than that time the Sheriff came and two men with him. I told him the whole affair in a few words—exhibited the hand-bills I had for him and then he made for the cart. He told the man inside who he was, and if he made the least resistance he was a dead man. Then I slipped the iron wrench out, and as I left the door down, the fellow made a spring.—I caught him by the ankle and he came down on his face, and in a moment more the officers had him. It was now daylight and the moment I saw the chap I recognized him. He was marched to the lock-up, and I told the Sheriff I should remain in Town all day.

"After breakfast the Sheriff came down to the tavern and told me that I had caught the very bird, and that if I would remain until the next morning I should have the reward of two hundred dollars, which had been offered. I found my goods all safe, paid the express agent for bringing them from Indianapolis, and then went to work to stow them away in my cart. The bullet holes were found in the top of my vehicle just as I expected. They were in a line about five inches apart, and had I been where I usually sit, two of them would have hit me near the small of the back, and passed upwards, for they were sent with a strong charge of powder, and his pistol was a heavy one.

"On the next morning the Sheriff called upon me and paid me two hundred dollars in gold, for he made himself sure that he had got the villain. I afterwards found a letter in the Post-office at Portsmouth for me, from the Sheriff of Hancock county, and he informed me that Mr. Dick Hardhead was in prison for life."

So ended the pedler's story. In the morning I had the curiosity to look at his cart, and I found the four bullet-holes just as he had told us, though they were now plugged up with corks.

YOUNG LADIES—READ.

The following is from the Hartford daily Courant:

"What a number of idle, useless young women—they call themselves ladies—parade our streets. "They toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them." Do they ever look forward to the time when the real cares and responsibilities of life will cluster around them? Have they made, or are they making, any preparation for the onerous duties which will assuredly fall to their lot—duties to society, to the world, and to God? They lounge or sleep away their time in the morning. They never take hold of the drudgery, the repulsive toil which each son and daughter of Adam should perform in this world. They know nothing of domestic duties. They have no habits of industry, no taste for the useful, no skill in any useful art. They are in the streets, not in the performance of their duties, or for the acquisition of health, but to see and to be seen. They expect thus to pick up a husband who will promise to be as indulgent as their parents have been and support them in idleness. They who sow the wind in this way are sure to reap the whirlwind. No Life can be exempt from cares. How mistaken an education do these girls receive who are allowed to believe that life is always to be a garden of roses! Labor is the great law of our being. How worthless will she prove who is unable to perform it!

It has been observed that by far the greatest amount of happiness in civilized life is found in the domestic relations, and most of those depend on the house habits of the wife and mother. What a great mistake is then made by our young girls and their parents when domestic education is unattended to! Our daughters should be taught practically to bake, to cook, to arrange the table, to wash and iron, to sweep, and do everything that pertains to the order and comfort of the household. Domestics may be necessary, but they are always a necessary evil, and the best "help" a woman can have is herself. If her husband is ever so rich, the time may come when skill in domestic employments will secure to her a comfort which no domestic can procure.—Even if she is never called to labor for herself, she should, at least, know how such things ought to be done so that she cannot be cheated by her servants.

Domestic education cannot be acquired in the streets. It cannot be learned amidst the frivolities of modern society.

A good and worthy, and comfort-bringing husband can rarely be picked up on the pavement.

"The nymph who walks the public streets,
And eats her cup for all she meets,
May catch the fool who turns to stare,
But man of sense avoid the snare."

The highest and best interest of society in the future, demand a better, a more useful, a more domestic training of our young ladies."

☞ The following laconic epitaph, carved on a Spanish tombstone should be remembered. "I was well, tried to feel better—took physic, and here I am."

☞ White is a fast girl like the Great Eastern? Because when she goes abroad she is sure to have a swell after her.

An honest man's the noblest work of God—but a woman is the prettiest.

What we wish we readily give credit to, and what we think ourselves we hope is the opinion of other men.

THE SIMPLE SECRET.

Twenty clerks in a store; twenty hands in a printing office; twenty apprentices in a ship-yard; twenty young men in a village all want to go on in the world and expect to do so. One of the clerks will become a partner, and make a fortune; one of the compositors will become an influential citizen; one of the apprentices will become a master builder; one of the young villagers will get a handsome farm and live like a patriarch—but which one is the lucky individual? Lucky! there is no luck about it. The thing is almost as certain as the Rule of Three. The young fellow who will distance his competitors is he who masters his business, preserves his integrity, who lives cleanly and purely, who devotes his leisure to the acquisition of knowledge, who never gets in debt, who gains friends by deserving them, and who saves his spare money. There are some ways to fortune shorter than old dusty highways—but the staunch men of the community, the men who achieve something really worth having, good fortune, good name and serene old age, all go in this road.

OUR LOCAL PAPER.

Reader, did you ever reflect on the subject of supporting liberally the press, and first of all, your own local newspaper? If not, permit us to suggest to you your privilege and your duty in this respect.

Each city, town and village in a country like America should be represented by a live local newspaper, and it would be well, not only for the people and the place so represented, to have a paper which would reflect credit on both, but a paper which would be a credit and an honor to the nation. Strangers from abroad judge us by our newspaper press, and hence the importance of making that instrument as perfect and potent as possible.

It is the duty of every citizen of each place to contribute something toward improving and strengthening the local paper. He may do it by subscribing and paying for his paper, by advertising well, by recommending it to others, or in all these ways. Were the country press as liberally patronized and as well supported as it should be, the country would not be so flooded with the worthless trash, in the shape of "love-and-murder stories," as it now is, which poison and vitiate the minds of the young.—There is usually more moral integrity and circumspection manifested by editors of the country press than by those in the large cities, and a more healthy tone of mind and morals will generally be found to pervade them. They are more free from the reports of degrading vices and crimes, and are never opened with that feeling of suspicion which attaches to the common "flash" literature of the day.

The country press may be improved.—Each individual residing within the limits of its sphere and circulation may add in its improvement, and add to its subscription list. He may be on the "look-out" for interesting information, and when this is obtained, communicate it to the editor. He may bring his own before the public by an appropriate advertisement, or, if he has beef, pork or grain to sell, he may announce it through his local press. He may give historical sketches of the past, and show the progress and change going on at present. He may help to make his local paper a source of instruction to strangers, and of entertainment to his neighbors. Is he a manufacturer? Let him invite capital and influence by setting forth such natural advantages as the place may possess, and indicate the routes by which it may be reached, its accessibility to the market, &c. There is no estimating the advantages to any town or village of a live local journal, and we doubt if there is to be found at the present time an editor who gets fully paid for the service he performs, and we put the responsibility where it belongs—mainly on the people, whose business and duty it is, first of all, to support handsomely their own local paper.—Life Illustrated.

I WONDER.

When a young man is clerk in a warehouse or bank and dresses like a prince, smokes "some" cigars, drinks "nice" brandy, attends theatres, balls and the like, I wonder if he does it all upon the wages of his clerkship?

When a young lady sits in the parlor all day, with her lily-white fingers covered with rings, I wonder if her mother don't make the puddings, and do a good deal of work in the kitchen?

When a man gets three times a day to get a dram, I wonder if he will not, by and by, go four times?

When a young lady laces her waist a third smaller than nature made it, I wonder if her pretty figure will not shorten life some dozen years or more, besides make her miserable while she does live?

When a young man is dependent on his daily toil for his income, and marries a fine lady who does not know how to make a loaf of bread or mend a garment I wonder if his is not lacking somewhere, say towards the top, for instance.

A FAST COUNTRY.

The proprietor of ——— Hotel, has rather an exaggerated way of talking. During the Provincial Exhibition there recently he was conversing with some gentlemen from Buffalo when he dilated largely and eloquently on the wonderful changes he had witnessed since he came to the 'Attributive City.' One of the gentlemen, thinking he saw something green, mixed him, with deflected seriousness, whether he had seen any changes in Nature itself—and whether Burlington Bay had not been drunk dry by his elephant, or the mountains had changed their configurations. The hotel-keeper saw that the Yankee had mistaken him, and resolved to answer it fast according to his folly.'

"Oh, certainly, sir," said Bonifacc. "You see that mountain I'm pointing to the Bible tells us upon the Catskill side of Hamilton which stands 700 above the Bay.

The Yankee replied that he did.

"Well, then," resumed Bonifacc, "when I first came to Hamilton, that Mountain was nothing but a hole in the ground!"

FROM "LIFE'S RIVER," AN UNPUBLISHED POEM, by T. H. ROBERTSON.

PART I.

Europe expectant waits a glorious advent,
Earth's smiled and mitred sceptres expectant wait;
And eastward from behind the icy ramparts
Siberia astonished gazes, and commotion
The curse of bondage with a god-like will,
Which cities, and castle, and crime immensely curb
Till manhood, stung to spurn their ignoble yoke,
Shall swim to life's goal of freedom through a sea of blood!
Mighty achievements pressing on the loon
Of Caucasian air, the nations with a joy
That crown'd enslavers trembling feel, and mock!
Slay Saxon sever,
Wine from th' unmarbled mounds by Enzine wave,
And purer from the scourge of Hindoo prong,
The dozing German and the cold-brow'd Gaul—
Magyars and treasons tempering with the slave,
Armed with assassin steel to stop new States.
May Saxons, grasp'd by Heaven, prepare!
Prepare! for manhood yet shall be itself,—
Prepare! the long oppressed yet shall have their due,— Prepare for justice or, for seas of blood,—
That peace triumph'nt nets her throne amidst
The risen glories of the Latter Day,
Or nations, armed by Heaven to people hell,
Goaded by demons, curse earth with a double curse!

The chained by Mexique rives long to see
The fledgling eaglet of the sterner North
Spread his broad pinions to the west'rn sun;
They long to see
An ensign floating on the west'rn winds—
Britannia's honored gift, a copy fair
Of her loved Isles—stars'd as the arch of night,
With orbs whose light is hope, and help and freedom,
Nor dim'd by Negro tears, nor fashion wrongs!
The scourge-scarr'd sons of bondage long to see
Those folds the slave beholds, but slave no more,—
To see that ensign float the slaver seas,
And, stricken, plies no more his 'canoed craft—
The tank-slave seas, and trumblingly anon,
Drops from his unnerved grasp the ready lash,—
The oppressed beholds, and his first spirit spurns
Oppression and its signs, stands up a MAN!
Hail, glorious flag!
Then wav'st o'er lands that tyrants dare not track,
Or tracks be it, the bloody track is filled
With his life-blood beside his uncoffin'd corse!
O God, forbid that red-war's cannon wheel
Shall ever rut our beach, or mound our fields
With bloody trench!

But should treason hatch
Her reptile brood, or foreign serf invade, or Empire shine own to crush their country's foe
Our Flag, be it the sign of Victory,
The sword of Canada, be it the sword of Heaven!
Banner, wave!
Trust to the true—Fear sunsign to the false
Flag of the free—hope's anchor to the slave.
Unfurl thy broad folds to the groaning world
And, since thou art the dress of sweet, thou
Thyself must be of light—a star of Heaven!

—Canada,
The flag committed to thy noble care,
In camp and field the "100th" proudly guards;
And Britain's foe, and man's, and thine shall know
The staff of which kind Providence hath made
The thousands left upon the strand thy soldier's claim.
A flag, the original of theirs, was seen
On Sarbey's shore, and playing heavenly fled
As sang a shout of joy throughout the Isle:
'Twas free, from shore to shore 'twas free!
Man found a voice and arm! From sea to sea
As deeps the live-thunder o'er the billowing waves,
The pæan rang—a nation jubilant!—
Midst cobwebb'd prisons the cloistered bats
Medieval slumbers broke, and o'er the dead
Of Cassocked Royalty spew'd by nimbletoes,
Sounded the bell of grand-enshrined freed
To Freedom's guild! The night of thrones right,
Bared it breast brow to Heaven, and flung its locks
With boyish glee about; and tossed that ball
Adown time's valley!

Yet again 'twas caught
By Saxon hands, and dipped from Boston's wharfs
In west'rn brine.
Thence, struck from Bunker's, bounded
From peak to peak around the west'rn sphere!
Still gathering head-way, towards the rising sun
It scattered flew and struck the Tuileries;
Bounding thence, leaped the round of Europe thrones.
The Saxon watch'd that ball's artistic course
And watch it not; and help'd by eagle's
Within their vortex to assist it on its way.
And stepp'd expectant behind to grab the expectant blow!

Upon, and side by side with Revolution,
Sentenced back on and confronted reason
Followed bound extinguishing, we purpose
Quite thrown-over dynasties, plus hungering
Of ancient dust; of clans, states, gentes old
Unheeded shake abroad their blazonry;

A meteor game's afoot,—a higher stake
Hangs on that bounding ball's God-guided bound;
And echo from far Dedreleid repeats
To Alpine peaks the fortune of the game
That engages struggling heads.

My country, thine
The foremost place—the humblest player thou!

Let brave men scourge and sell the wronged and helpless,
Let freemen lynch and hearse as they may,
Our wags, flag, and laws but hide their time
To reign from sea to sea, from pole to stormy cape.
The west'rn sphere is ours, let boatsmen hope,
Our flag, on Calvary won, let boatsmen trust,
To-day's salvation's day, let boatsmen strike;
This Continent was never made for slaves
A curse is on the soil that bondage tills
A cancer fester's on that nation's vitals
Who buy and sell men.
Man shall be avenged;
"Yes, one shall not escape Me," saith the Lord.

Ah! poor proud Nation,
Your very strength your very weakness is,
Your wealth your poverty, your faith your foe!
Apostate freemen, slaves!
Accursed inheritors of high-Heaven's blackest curse,
Let Egypt's fate announce thy certain doom
Sure as God stands upon the circle of the Heavens!
Great God, dare man sell man
In whose live nostrils lives the breath of life,—
Traffic in gold, and bargain souls and flesh,
Barter for gain the image of Thy self;
Are hearts attuned to harmonies divine
Twin rudely rifled for a little pelf?
Ah, gold! red gold! and men dare this and name
Manhood, and charity, and Christ!

OCTOBER.

October—called by the Saxons Wyn-monath, that is, Wine-month, and Winter-fitlech,—bears pretty much the same character in the Fall of the year as April does in the Spring. The beginning of April is still wintry—the end may often be strong claims to the name of summer; the commencement of October is frequently distinguished by the lingering of absolute warmth, and here and there a flower—the child, by stops of frost, and sometimes snow. In the early part of the month, we can remember, of our boyish Octobers, seeing the hardy yarrow and a few other lingering flowers remain, while the meadow-saffron and the autumnal crocus, sweetly springing up from the soil, gave a last gleam of floral beauty to the year. If strolling outside the busy haunts of trade, we will find the grass in still vividly green and luxuriant as in Spring; and the clear days allow a, in the perfect repose of landscape, the brilliance of the waters, and the strong shadows cast by the trees upon the sunny ground, the highest pictorial beauty. But the chief glory of this month is the gorgeous splendor of the woods; and, however much we may love and admire our woodlands and their scenery in other seasons of the year, it is in this month they may be pronounced most beautiful. Toward the end of it, the fall-away of the leaf upon the hill side, along the river brim, may wide-spread over the extended [illegible] a magnificent spectacle. [illegible] of tree, so beautifully varied in [illegible] character—the oak or stemmed [illegible] beech-branched birch, the tall, smooth beech, the wide-spread oak and chestnut-each displays its own finest hue of orange, rich brown or yellow, which, mingling, with here [illegible] of unchanged trees by the darkness of the pine—presents a view of rare scale, glowing and splendid. Yet few can see our home woods in October, and pleasantly as we can look back upon their variegated loveliness, they are exceeded by the forests of America: the greater variety of trees, and the greater effect of climate, conspire to render these, in decay, gorgeous and beautiful beyond description.

"The woods! oh, solemn are the boundless woods
Of the great Western World, in their decline."

As we take our solitary stroll, everything around us betokens that

"The harvest is past, the Summer is ended."

The dark and gloomy acorn-cup scattered in profusion on the ground, the ruined home-abodements glow in their rugged shell-which have burst open by their fall, and hogs are busy gathering the coveted hickory and walnut. The birds enjoy a plentiful feast in the fore-tops, while the squirrel, "gray and pensive," is tracking the nuts and fall of life, are startling through the hard, dry leaves. The winds, which at this time arise, disperse far and wide many seeds which are copiously furnished with feathers as wings for this purpose, as carefully has nature provided all the means to attain the purpose to the trees and herbs throughout the world. And though we call this season "The Fall of the Year," let us thankfully remember that her present glory fades not, but only to raise and glow again with all the ardor and in all the beauty of a future spring.

The Prince's Progress.

THE PRINCE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 17.

The Prince and suite arrived at the depot in this city at twenty minutes past 12 to day.

The train remained but 5 minutes and then left for Worcester and Boston.

Col. Thompson and Col. Sargent entered the car and were introduced to the Prince, and are coming on with him.

The depot was densely crowded, and every available window in the vicinity was filled. At least 10,000 people were present, who greeted him with repeated cheers.

PALMER, October 17.

After leaving Springfield, Colonel Newell A. Thompson addressed the Prince, in the grand saloon car, presented his credentials, and welcomed the Prince in the Governor's name to Massachusetts.

The Prince merely bowed in reply, and soon after entered into conversation.

At Pittsfield there was an immense assemblage.

The Prince went upon the car platform and was greatly cheered.

At Albany this morning, the Burgess Corps was out in very full numbers.

At the depot, after the Prince stepped upon the platform, he turned round and shook hands with Senator Seward and Governor Morgan.

He appears to have been much pleased with them and was very intimate with Mr. Seward.

At West Brookfield there was a crowd cheering as the train passed.

Worcester, Oct. 17—2½ P. M.

At Worcester the crowd was immense, and the Prince showed himself on the platform in answer to their cheers.

Here the splendid Engine Addison Gilmore was taken off and the train surrounded by Superintendent Gray to Mr. Twisdell's care.

The cars will reach Boston at 3.45.

BOSTON, Oct. 18.

The reception and entertainment of the Prince here was a great success; second to none in the United States.

ARRIVAL IN PORTLAND.

At a quarter to two o'clock Portland was gained. The carriages passed through a considerable portion of the city, to the Grand Trunk depot, where stood in waiting many individuals favoured by the Mayor, and eight companies of the Militia of the state of Maine. The carriage door was opened, and out stepped the Prince, looking somewhat dusty from the ride, but healthier and better than when he first landed on Newfoundland shores. He walked through the ranks of the volunteers and took his seat in the carriage prepared for his reception. To his left sat the Mayor, opposite to him the Duke of Newcastle, and Lord Lyons. Some little delay occurred before the Militia could be got into proper trim, but that accomplished the Royal cortege moved off at a slow pace through the principal streets of the city, occupying in their journey a little more than one hour.

THE START.

For the last hour a cold north-east wind has been rising, which gives white crests to the waters of the bay, and brings with them a few clouds to the sky. The smoke rises in volumes from the funnels of the war steamers, the anchors are weighed, and a few minutes watching enables us to perceive that the journey homewards had been commenced. The sun is fast sinking in the west. The purple hues of the distant ethereal shores are deepening as the mighty vessels near the outlet. The summits of the hills are tinged with gold; the waters become darker, the sails of the vessels whiter by contrast. And as the light of day gradually declines, as the bright and glorious colors of nature gradually sober down, so gradually are the Royal ships lost to view, distance and darkness combining to hide them from human sight. Let us trust that He who holds the waters in the hollow of his hand, will watch over the Royal boy, bring him in safety to the home of his fathers, and grant that he may become the pride and glory of the mighty Empire he is born to rule.

CHARIVARI.

A very thrilling fracas occurred in the town of L'Original on Saturday night last. A man named LeTour[illegible] off with a young woman of [illegible] notorious antecedents in these [illegible]ilas Bourjoe—and commenced [illegible] without having had that little [illegible] ceremony first performed which is generally considered expedient. The moral feeling of the Burghers (as our old friend of the Economist used to call them) was touched. It would not brook such unholy conduct. It stood up for the prerogative and prequisites of the clergy. It grew warm and more indignant every hour until Saturday night, and then the separation reached the following crime:—About a dozen, in whom morality was most rigorous, armed themselves in hosiery, and proceeded in solid phalanx to the door of the cabin where the fond but erring couple were "dreaming the happy hours away," and commenced a serenade which was more noisy than complimentary. They then, like prudent people, retreated to a tavern near by, in order to get up a little more fortitier in re, even at the expense of a little monster in modo. While discussing their own prowess and planning another sortee, one of the objects of their attentions suddenly appeared in their midst, having an axe in hand, with which he loudly volunteered to cut open anybody's head, shoulders, back, belly or legs, who would step forward within a convenient distance. The obliging little man, however, was soon pinioned, and a rail being procured, was bound like Mazeppa to an uncomfortable stand. His oxen brought the faithful Bourjoe to the rescue, who sprang like a tigress into the crowd with a knife, dealing cuts down right and left. She made short work of it. Mazeppa was dropped like a hot half-penny. The brave scattered, and the rescuer and the rescued retreated in good order. It soon appeared, however, that she had left work for the surgeon, for no less than five were wounded. One is seriously hurt in the lung and his condition is critical. Another got two deep wounds in the back, which bled very freely but are, we believe, not serious. Another is wounded in the knee very badly. Two others are slightly hurt in the side. Our informant was not able to give the names of the injured. That is the "take," and it would be easy to "point the moral"—viz, people shouldn't interfere with other people's business and pleasure.—Ottawa Citizen.

THE LOSS OF THE POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.

From the London Times, Oct. 5.

The crisis which has come upon the Roman Church is one for which she is obviously wholly unprepared. She never can believe that every one, even the Emperor of the French, is against temporalities, and that it would be a relief to every one if the Pope quitted the Holy City. We see this in the tone taken by her advocates and champions everywhere. If any one wants to see a great Power grovelling in the dust he has only to cast his eye over the comments of the Ecclesiastic party upon the Italian movement, showing the most wretched impotent, blind rage, and nothing more.—This is the way in which the Roman Church takes a great trial. She does not know what to do; she has no view, no plan, no line of action before her, no policy to meet this new state of things; she is simply taken aback, and storms at her invaders.—As if it were of any use to be in a rage, and as if those whom she complains of were the people to be at all moved by it! Rome has great credit for versatility, for seeing her way under altered circumstances, and finding the proper treatment to give to all events; but it looks now as if she had lost herself, and were tripped and thrown off her balance; as if her head were gone; as if she could only think the past and the future were a dead wall to her; as if everything was a blank to her when the triple crown once went.

This is the more astonishing, because the Roman Catholics cannot point to a single part of the scope and system of their Church which requires the temporal power, of the Pope for its support. Their theory is quite complete without it; they confess that it is; they boast that it is. They would be ashamed to show their faces in the presence of Christendom and say that they needed the temporal power, and had not a perfect, complete, and sufficient basis without it. They have, therefore, always been particular and earnest in telling us that their ground is a spiritual one, and a spiritual one purely and exclusively, and that any temporal position connected with it is a mere accident, which has nothing to do with the life of the Church, and can be thrown off, like the most superficial drapery, without the least loss to the substance of the Church. They have always told us that their Church wields no fleshy weapon, but the sword of the Spirit; that she rules by moral power only, and that her one sole instrument for the support of her authority is spiritual censure, whereby she exercises the right which belongs to all religious bodies as such, of removing from her pale the dissentient and the disobedient. If this is their ground, then, what harm does the fall of the temporal power of the Pope do to the Roman Church? She can go on just the same, and do all the acts which she has done. The whole ground of discipline is open to her; the whole ground of doctrine is open to her. She can excommunicate right and left as much as she pleases, there is nothing to prevent her; she has still the sword of the Spirit, and can brandish it as she likes. She can go on "developing" Christian doctrine to her satisfaction; she added one doctrine to the faith a year or two ago, she may add twenty more, if she likes, within as many more years; whether Rome is under Papal rule, or French rule, or Sardinian rule, there will be nothing to prevent her. She is not likely to meet with any opposition to her creed-making either from Napoleon III. or from Cavour, who are probably not interested in this invisible department; but if she did she has it all in her own hands.—She can make and unmake, plant and pluck up, pull down and build, and work all her will and pleasure in the whole world of spiritual discipline and doctrine. What more does she want? She has the perfect command of a complete spiritual machinery, extending in every direction over the four quarters of the globe; she can summon every Bishop of her communion, from Mexico to Macao, to her central tribunal; she can hold any Council she likes, the Propaganda can go on, the Index Expurgatorius can go on, Oratories can go on. What is there that cannot go on all the same? What is there to dread, then in this loss of a temporal kingdom, and why cannot the Pope throw himself upon the inalienable spiritual power of his office, and take his stand upon his claim to be the spiritual centre of Christendom. That is his natural course, his politic course, the only course which religious honour leaves him under such circumstances as the present. The temporalities go whether he will or not; why, then, not, at any rate, make a virtue of necessity, and say that he can do without them when he cannot keep them? Such a course would be sure to awaken the highest enthusiasm of the whole Roman communion; it would kindle a flame in the whole Roman Catholic world; the signal would be given and the acts struck, all would know that a new order of things was commenced, and the result would be that a new line would be marked out for the Papacy by general consent. A fresh start would then be gained, and the basis of a new career would be laid down, and the new course of events would receive that treatment which every Roman Catholic would wish for it. The new course of events would have the suitable interpretation put upon it, and would be stamped in the most favorable way as the inauguration of a new era of the Papacy.

But this is not the idea of the Roman Church, or at any rate, of that party in it which surrounds the Pope. It clings to an old state of things with desperation, because it has not the least notion how to deal with a new state of things. The whole future is a blank to it if the Pope be not a temporal monarch. They look forward to it with simple confusion and dismay and know not what will become of the Church. It is without a view and without a policy. Put, this is naturally; it is disturbing. The Pope is all that St. Leo was if he is deprived of every fief of land in Italy. He is a great deal more than St. Leo was, for even the [illegible] supremacy made many long strides after St. Leo's time. Why cannot he fall back upon the spiritual supremacy, and throw up the adventitious secular addition which is grudged him, but which is the fruitful source of the most awkward relations and collisions? But, instead of this, what is the present hope of the Roman Catholic world? A war! "A war," says Archbishop Cullen's organ, "will cool this raging fever; grape shot will expel these humours." The Gallician Protest re-echo these sentiments. An European war, then, is to be the Reverend remedy and restorative for the Papacy; that is the last resource, and that is the last chance which now consoles the Papal party. A notable consolation indeed to a Christian Bishop and the [illegible] head of Christendom, who, according to his creed, ought to think one the most horrible of all things! But the Roman Court cannot disavail itself of the belief that this is merely a passing danger from a particular [illegible] and that [illegible] restoration. The [illegible] against the Papacy as a [illegible] is no more passing stir, it [illegible] principle to which the whole of modern policy is committed. But the Roman Court is still [illegible] in an obsolete dream, thinking of Saterne and Avignon, though not perhaps of Jerusalem, and of passing expedients of crowned heads. A war is to set everything right, and no new Papal view or policy is wanted. We shall see whether we have not had war enough, and whether the Pope may not, after all, quit Rome, and lose temporalities in a peaceful way.

THE SOCIAL CONGRESS AT GLASGOW.

In truth—it cannot be too frequently repeated, if for nothing else than to remind us of our duty—this is indeed a wonderful age in which we live. Wonderful not for one thing, nor for one class of things, but for all, and in all things appertaining to the interests of mankind; it is in deed and in fact, an age so wonderful as to be far beyond our appreciation. We are living in the midst of all that is going on, and we are too closely brought into contact with the work, changes, improvements, and discoveries of every day, to value and admire them as we would do were we looking on from that distance that could give us a commanding and comprehending view of the grand moving living panorama of the world's present doings. But what is to us of infinitely more importance than the mere movements of the world, is the heart-inspiring fact, that all these movements are in the right direction; that is, towards the moral, spiritual, and physical improvement of the human race.—The world, in one word, is looking forward in its own slow but sure course. And if we sometimes feel as if we might lose patience because she moves so slowly, let us but reflect, to check this impatience, how huge the world is, how different are her peoples, and how opposite in many instances are the seeming interests of contending nations and contending classes of men within them.—The world, and its enormous variety of questions, wants, and superfluities, taken altogether, is not a thing to be altered or re-moulded in a year, or in even a generation of years. Like the silent changes going on unmarked in its physical construction—unmarked, indeed, but none the less great and comprehensive—so are these slow but sure improvements altering her social condition, even though men may think and say they take place too cautiously for our impatient anxiety to "see the world made better." Look where we will, throughout civilization; look at the very depths of society, and examine its highest places, beyond us and around us, above us and beneath us, and if we give the due attention necessary, we have on every hand evidence of the most direct and convincing nature, that the formations of social society are undergoing changes quite as distinctly as the researches of philosophy bear witness to the changes earth is undergoing physically. General education, the printing press, and the Protestant spirit of free inquiry now affecting all orders of men, have done much to bring on these coming changes and improvements; and we see with the keenest delight that all such questions—questions interesting and invaluable to high and low, are now demanding and obtaining the attentive investigations of the highest order of intellect with which fallen man has been so bounteously endowed. Not, as in the dark ages, when only learned priests and here and there a great philosopher, could speak of these things or assume to understand them; at the present hour, for the one deep inquirer of those days, we have a thousand, ay, and thousands not limited either to one class, but to be found in all the various states and social ramifications of the community.—The prince and peasant are both deeply studying out the true solutions of our moral and governmental conditions. And what grander sight can mortal man desire than that Assembly sitting the other day in the fair city of our Western Scotland, Glasgow? And to this grand meeting of grand intellects is presented for elucidation the grand theme of mankind's elevation. Men of ability and note, and fame, and men of strong ability, but as yet without the fame, are there met from all quarters to consider this great, important, comprehensive theme. Judges and celebrities in science from America, philosophers of every stamp and of every country in Europe, with the wisest and the best of the land of Great Britain, rich and poor—even some of the very richest and the poorest—are mingling their thoughts and reasoning together, how best, and with the least hurt to any, the truest interest of all can be carried into practice for the truest benefit of all. With such a sight before us, who can lose hope while meditating the evil that surrounds us, and who can not rejoice to see the stirring efforts made to redeem the weak, the fallen, and the frail of our common humanity.—And who is it that could utter one word of discouragement to stay such a godlike enterprise as that undertaken by this Social Congress of thinking, hopeful reasonable men? Ministers and laymen, nobles and mechanics, dreamers and men of practical ideas are all there, and all examining, debating, and lecturing without any special respect of persons. True it is the meeting itself is a marvellous one, but their work, and mode of working, is even more marvellous still. Some of the best known and wealthiest employers in the United Kingdom are sitting side by side with probably some of their own workmen, trying to discover the proprieties, values, benefits, and evils of "Trades Unions," and discussing all their merits or demerits, in the best of feeling, without any of that animosity that was almost believed to exist naturally between the workman and him who bought his service. Surely this is a thing of no small consequence to the interest of both in time to come. In another department of the Congress, we have the greatest merchants of the land, the small dealer, and the common collier, reading their papers on "Co-operative Stores," the "Truck System," and debating all the bearings of such questions, without pride on the one hand or unreasoning opposition on the other. More than that, we find within these halls men of no small note actually advocating on far with their opinions, as to believe that co-operating is one of the great levers by which the industrial populations of society are to be lifted up to a higher and more comfortable position than ever heretofore enjoyed—such men as Rev. Dr. Norman McLeod, Lord Brougham, Potter, of Manchester Mr. Kinnaird, M. P., Duncan McLaren, and Wm. Chambers, of Edinburgh, join hands with the toil-worn mechanic on this question, and declare that in the judicious working out this principle lies the hopes of honest industry. Reformatories and their inmates is another of the problems under their wise consideration, and it is one requiring all the sympathy that may be brought to bear upon it; for though the juvenile may be trained well within the limits of the hospital, the day of training ends at last, and he plunges into the great struggling world, with perhaps no one who feels interests in his welfare, or sympathies in consonance with his feeling and endeavour, to guard and help while in their infancy to give in and die. Homes for the honest working man, that are fitted to promote in health and comfort human beings, is another of the objects of this Association, and a praiseworthy one it is. But to give even an index to the proceedings of this body, is beyond our power. Lack of space restrains us, and we can do little more than congratulate the great enduring classes of society, that such a work is taken in hand by such men, and for their advantage especially, though ultimately sure to be for the incalculable benefit of all.

But while we congratulate the world of industrial pursuits in Great Britain in their behalf, we would earnestly suggest that even here it would be wise to do as they have done there, and examine such questions as they affect the people on this side of the Atlantic. We stand in every sense as much in need of such investigations for the benefit of our mercantile, trades, and laboring classes here as in Great Britain; and certainly it would be a pleasing sight to all rational men, could we see in this land of great advantages Congresses of our finest intellects and earnest-thinking mechanics, giving as much of their attentions to such high questions, as are now worse than thrown away in the grovelling investigations of bespotted spiritualism, and such other equally nonsensical pursuits with which the mind of this country is by far too deeply interested. Let the lesson be gleaned from this Glasgow Congress, and let us here have our studies directed to the actualities of life, and not the foolish dreams of foolish dreamers.—Scottish American.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25th, 1860.

THE HARVEST OF 1860.

The last accounts from Britain announce that in England there will be a deficiency in the quantity of wheat, and what is as bad, much that will be saved is unfit for milling purposes. The potatoes in England are a very deficient crop, thus adding to the requirements of breadstuffs to be imported. In Scotland the crops are better and housed in better condition, and the potatoes are an average crop; still there has been much wet weather in harvest and much grain damaged.

The Mark Lane Express—that barometer of the British Markets—says a great deficiency exists, and large quantities of grain will be required, not only to supply the obvious deficiency, but also to mix with the grain injured by the wet weather.

On the American continent the crops have seldom been equalled. With the exception of Kansas and some of the south-western States, the uniform testimony is of the abundance of the harvest of 1860. In Canada the yield of wheat, our great staple, is large, and we have the gratification of receiving good prices, in addition to the large supply; thus foreshadowing the return of that prosperity we enjoyed prior to the great financial crisis of '57. At the present moment the best samples of wheat bring 6s. 3d. per bushel, and to all present appearances prices will not decline. One thing strikes us this Fall, that with a good market, good prices, and above an average crop in the hands of the farmers, very little is coming forward. This holding back for higher prices is often attended with serious results to the farmers themselves. If in circumstances to keep on to their grain, it is no one's business but their own; but if otherwise, it is positively injurious to themselves to keep their grain, as interest accrues fast, and if purchases are to be made, in no way is money more surely made than in buying with cash in hand. Nothing gives a better status to a man in the community than to say he is a punctual man, he will pay when his liabilities mature, or that "he's as good as wheat." It is folly for a person to be paying high interest for money, or to be under an unfulfilled engagement, when he has plenty of grain in his barn but who refuses to take a good price for it, merely because he expects it may go higher. How often such persons find to their cost that prices go down in place of up. When an independent man loses by holding on to his produce we laugh at him and say "served him right;" but when his neighbour who has obligations on him errs in this way, we say he is a fool, and anger takes the place of mirth. We do advise our agricultural readers, by all means, to make the most of what they have to spare; but when there is a good demand and good prices it is wisdom to accept them. The articles of pork and oats are in demand, and will be for some time in our market by lumbering. We trust our farmers will learn by their folly last year and not keep back their oats. Every one is anxious to do the best he can; but if farmers will not supply oats at a fair price, depend upon it, the lumberman will teach them again that they are not dependent entirely upon them, and they will scatter Canadian lands on the western prairies.—And since we have ventured to tender advice, we will go a little further and advise our numerous readers, in a year like the present of general prosperity, to make a strenuous effort to pay off old scores. If debts are not paid off in a year like the present, pray when will they be? What a happy state of things would it be if our farming community were out of debt! Our merchants and [illegible] would find like new men. Merchandise would be offered cheaper than at present, and an untold, [illegible] necessary implements of farming; prosperity and comfort would flow in upon us. Indications of winter are thickening upon our streets present groups of heartbroken men arriving from below, who disappear in a day or two, to give place to fresh groups arriving. These hardy lumbermen have to be provided for, while they in turn assist their employer to realize from their labour and skill, and the employer scatters the proceeds, so that all are benefitted. The lumber trade is the largest artery of our trade, and gives life to all other branches.

☞ Mr. Andrew Jeffrey has issued an address to the electors of Newcastle Division announcing himself a candidate for Legislative honors, but in what interest is not so apparent. However sincere Mr. Jeffrey may be, we cannot help thinking he had been brought forward merely as a cat's-paw in the desperate struggle to defeat Mr. Rutton.

THE GOVERNOR GENERALSHIP.

Sir Edmund Head has quit the shores of America, and Sir Fenwick Williams has been sworn in Administrator of the Government of Canada. Few will mourn the change; few will wish him God speed and return. Notwithstanding the assurance of ministerial organs that Sir Edmund will intrude his hated presence again upon a people who hold him in disrespect—aye, even in contempt, for his culpable partizanship, we incline to the belief that the "hero of the double shuffle" will never again place his foot upon Canadian soil, as the Governor of its free and loyal people.

Rumor has it that Sir Edmund has fallen heir to a Princely fortune in England, and that his absence will be merely temporary, and of a business character, and that he is expected to return before the close of the year. Let us hope that his fortune is so large that it may take the remainder of his life in England to take care of it. No very bad wish, as all will agree, but one many hearts can devoutly pray for.

When we look at the subject fairly we can see no hope for his friends here that he will ever return. The Colonial Secretary is an astute statesman, and his recent tour through this Province could not have failed to impress him with the existing feeling of indignation against the Governor General among the people. Such demonstrations of scorn and contempt as were visible at nearly every place visited would be right well understood by the Duke, and prudence and policy would dictate a remedy in such a state of things. The grooms at Cobourg, Toronto, and elsewhere, the burning of effigies at Port Hope and Bowmanville, evinced more than ordinary dislike, and could not be mistaken.

Moreover, the term of office of Sir Edmund has expired; that a new lease will be granted is improbable. An elevation to the peerage is an ambition of Sir Edmund's and perhaps in consideration of his services in the art of "shuffling," and by aid of his bullion lever, he may secure himself a fossilated peerage. We think we may sleep easy for any further trouble Sir Edmund will ever give us; he will be snugly shelved, and a man with more than money and presumption to recommend him to the people will take his place. Who the next Governor will be is yet a conjecture. That a better man than the present Administrator could be chosen we do not believe. Sir Fenwick Williams is a statesman, a hero, and a gentleman, and what will go farther to recommend him than many other qualifications is the fact that he is a Colonist. For many years have the people of the British North American Provinces protested against the appointment of men to that high office who are strangers to our country and ignorant of our laws and institutions. The appointment of Sir Fenwick Williams would remove this grievance also; and let us hope before many days to witness and Imperial manifesto proclaiming the Defender of Kars Governor General of Canada.

LOSSES AT SEA.

The present year has been a marked one for steamship disasters. Early in the season the mournful tidings came to us of the loss of the Indian, and hardly had the shock subsided when the appalling news of the wreck of the Hungarian struck terror to the hearts of all. The recent loss of the Lady Elgin, although on inland waters, may be set down in this list. The confidence of the already timid public will receive another shock by the news of the loss of the fine steamship Connaught when within a few hours sailing of Boston harbor, and the providential escape of the crew and passengers.

The oft-repeated assertion that steamship conveyance is more safe than the old sailing system will not be credited so freely when on glancing at the following table it will be seen that no less than 21 steamships have been lost within 12 years on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans alone, at a sacrifice of over 2,315 lives, and $16,860,000 of property:—

		Lives lost.	Value of vessel and cargo.
President,	British	130	$1,200,000
Arctic,	American	300	1,800,000
Pacific,	American	240	2,000,000
City of Glasgow,	Brit...	428	850,000
Humbolt,	American	none	1,600,000
Franklin,	American	none	1,900,000
City of Philadelphia,	Br.	none	600,000
Tempest,	British	150	360,000
Lyonnais,	French	160	280,000
Austria,	German	456	850,000
Canadian,	British	none	400,000
Argo,		none	100,000
Indian,		27	125,000
Northerner,	American	32	75,000
Hungarian,	British	120	270,000
San Francisco,	American	160	400,000

Yankee Blade,	"	75	280,000
Union,	"	none	300,000
Connaught,	British	none	1,200,000

The Arctic, San Francisco, and Central America foundered; the Independence, Yankee Blade, and Northerner were wrecked on the Pacific, and the Canadian, Humbolt, Franklin, Argo, and Hungarian, on the Atlantic coast; the Lyonnais was sunk by collision. The President, Pacific, City of Glasgow, and Tempest were never heard of, and the Austria was burned.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

From all accounts a violent shock of an earthquake was felt about the hour of 6 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, 17th inst., throughout the length of the Province, but more severe in the east. In Quebec and Montreal the phenomenon was distinctly felt. Houses trembled, windows and doors were severely shaken and people rushed in their beds. It is thought to have passed from east to two minutes, and it is ascertained that no accident occurred.

☞ His Worship the Mayor left here yesterday for New York. His object is to get the best advice and treatment for his disease. We sincerely hope he may succeed in his laudable attempt to get it removed.

ENTERTAINING ROYALTY.

No people on the face of the earth spend money freer than Americans in entertaining sensation guests. But no sooner do visitors leave their doors than they begin to reckon the cost of entertaining them. A "calkilatin" Yankee contemporary has set to work and estimated the cost of entertaining the Prince of Wales and suite, and when we look at the sum total our eyes start, and we begin to wonder if we have not paid pretty tall for our whistle. Here are the figures:—

Detroit	$20,000
Chicago	20,000
St. Louis	20,000
Cincinnati, including ball	100,000
Pittsburg	10,000
Harrisburg	10,000

Richmond, including ball	50.000
Baltimore	20,000
Philadelphia, including opera	100,000
New York	750,000
West Point	5,000

TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

We are happy to announce that the Good Templars have secured Mr. Hewlitt, the noted Temperance orator, to deliver a lecture on the subject of Temperance in this place on Thursday evening next, Nov. 1. The press everywhere speak in the highest terms of Mr. Hewlitt's lectures. Out of a dozen extracts handed us, equally complimentary, we select the following:

Professor S. M. Hewlitt visited our city by invitation of our leading citizens, and treated us with the best lecture on Temperance we ever listened to. He is a sound reasoner, and though a small man physically he "can knock whiskeydom into blue fits. His fund of anecdote is inexhaustible, and he tells them as no one else can.—St Paul Minnesotian.

S. M. Hewlitt, the famous Temperance Lecturer, delivers a lecture in Dickinson's Hall this evening. Mr. Hewlitt has a reputation of being second to no lecturer but Gough. We consider Professor Hewlitt the best of the two. His manner of speaking, his voice, his power of imitation, are in our estimation, more effective and pleasing than Gough's. We wish him success in his field of reform.—Waukegan, Ill., Gazette.

THE NEW UNION SCHOOL PRINCIPAL.

While we regret the decision of the School Board in concluding to dispense with the services of the learned and respected Principal of the Union School, Rev. Mr. McClure, it is gratifying to know that his successor is a gentleman who comes to us highly recommended from his former field of labor. At a meeting of the Drummondville, C. W., County Grammar School Trustees, held on Saturday, 13th inst., the following resolution was agreed to unanimously:

Resolved,—That we, the Board of Trustees of the Drummondville County Grammar School now learn with regret that circumstances have rendered it necessary for the present Principal of our School, Jas M. Dunn, Esq., to resign his connection with said School, he having been appointed to the head-mastership of the Peterborough Union Grammar School. That during our acquaintance with Mr. Dunn his conduct as a private individual has been exemplary, his services as Teacher have been most acceptable. That we cannot allow him to leave his present charge without expressing the the hope that from the field of labor upon which he is about to enter he may receive that share of friendship and respect which his talents and abilities so justly entitle him to receive and that he may be blest with a long life of usefulness and honor to himself, and an honor to the profession of which he is a worthy member.

HORRIBLE SUICIDE.

One of the most horrible cases of suicide ever heard of in the calendar of self-destruction was enacted in East Flamboro', on Saturday last, when James Black, innkeeper, of New Berwick, burned himself to death by sitting on a burning pile of sticks. The facts of the case are as follows:—Black had kept a tavern for some twenty years in Puslinch; about a year ago, in one of his fits of the "blues," he beat his wife till her life was despaired of, but with great care she recovered. He rented the tavern and removed to Mount Forest, and started in business as a butcher, which did not prosper with him. A few months ago, he removed to Clinton, on the line of the Buffalo and Huron Railway, where his family are at present. He came here on Saturday week, and at first appeared very unsettled, and told some of his acquaintances that this would be the last time they would meet—they had better shake hands. The week passed on till Saturday morning, when he was noticed going into a field where some boys were burning brush, and sat down on the burning pile, till his clothes were all burned off him. The boys gave the alarm, when two of Mr. Robert Marshall's sons came and dragged him off, but he still persisted in going on. They tried to take him off a second time, but he threatened them, when one ran for assistance to Mr. Martin, who, with some others, got him off, but he still wanted to remain on, saying that was his doom. He then was entirely roasted. Not a particle of clothing remained on him. He bore it all without any signs of torture, until taken to Mr. Marshall's, where he was attended by Dr. Ghent, but medical aid was of no avail. He lingered on for about eight hours, when death came to his relief.—Guelph Advertiser.

MR. HOGAN.—The official Gazette of Saturday contains a proclamation from the Governor, offering a reward of five hundred dollars to any person or persons who may give such evidence, as shall be considered satisfactory to the Government of the Province of Canada, of the existence and present place of residence, of John Sheridan Hogan, Esq., M.P.P., if alive, or if he be dead, of the circumstances attendant on his death and burial.

There is a young man named Mark Rails at Bent's Fort, who was recently stabbed in three places and shot three times, scalped, and left for dead by the Kiowa Indians, but who afterwards regained his consciousness and walked thirty-five miles to a place of safety and succor. He has now nearly recovered, but has only two locks of hair left upon his head, as all the rest was taken off with the scalp.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—In your issue of the 18th inst., "VOX VERITATIS" comes out as usual with his bold assertions, and in addition to this to indicate, it seems, the desperation of his cause, he descends at the close of his letter to low scurrility, and would think if he had strong confidence in his cause, he would not indulge in, nor resort to such. Let the public judge what that is worth.

"V. V." very nicely prescribed in his first letter the course to be pursued by any one who might "attempt to impugn any one of his general propositions," that "he would do so alleging facts only from scripture or history." Now, in his last letter in the Examiner he asserts respecting "Anabaptists" what he has not proved; therefore, his assertions fall to the ground, according to his own prescribed rule. Surely he might well be told "Physician heal thyself."

I would ask "V. V." to peruse carefully, and with a mind open to conviction, the authentic volume published at Breda, in 1819, referred to in my last communication. The eminently learned men who prepared the said volume, not themselves Baptists, have published to all the result of their honest and candid investigations. Yes, they declared to the world that the "Anabaptists" were the original Waldenses, and have long in the history of the Church received the honour of that origin. "On this account the Baptists may be considered a. the only christian community that has stood since the days of the Apostles," &c. Now, I would ask an intelligent public whether are we to place more confidence in "V. V.'s" assertions, than in what those distinguished historians referred to have testified? Let "V. V." hear what the Roman Catholic Prelate, Cardinal Hosius, President of the Council of Trent, says respecting the Baptists to the Protestants of the Reformation. "If you behold their cheerfulness in suffering persecution the Anabaptists run before all heretics. If you have regard to their number, it is likely that in multitude they would roam above all others if they were not grievously plagued and cut off with the knife of persecution. If you have an eye to the outward appearance of godliness both the Lutherans and the Zuinglians must needs grant that they far pass them. If you will be moved by the boasting of the word of God, they be no less bold than Calvin to preach!"

Does "V. V" mean to say that there were no Baptists for 400 years—from 1150 to 1522? Though they were not known by the name of Baptists there were many, even during the period referred to, both in England and on the continent of Europe, who held and practised believer's baptism by immersion. About 1160 the Paulicians were numerous. The great mass of them were godly people. Of them, Mosheim says, that they rejected the baptism of infants. Dr. Allex says "they were Anabaptists, or rejecters of infant baptism; and were consequently often reproached by that term." The various sects that were called by the general name of Albigenses, were rejectors of infant baptism. Most of them were Baptists, and they amounted in the various kingdoms of Europe, about the year aforesaid to 800,000 professed communicants. They suffered terrible persecutions. They were finally nearly all merged into other sects. The Paterines who held baptist principles, were about the middle of the 13th century, according to Renier, numerous, and "their disciples were an immense multitude."

In Germany about 1336 the Lollerds, who were Baptists amounted to 24,000.—In Austria and Bohemia to 80,000. (Dupin.) They were pretty numerous in England, also, at that time. Thus "V. V.'s" assertions relative to Baptists and the period referred to are disproved.

I suppose the public are waiting with patience till "V. V." adduces his proofs in support of his eight propositions.

PHILALETHES.

THE PETERBOROUGH BAPTIST CHAPEL.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—A communication in last week's Examiner, in relation to certain matters connected with the Baptist Chapel in this Town, being calculated to mislead, we consider it due to Mr. Gilmour and the public, to say a few words in reply, reserving to a future opportunity, the full "facts of the case."

1st. It is "well known" that nearly five years ago the "Church" was reorganized and became a Regular Baptist Church.

2nd. Mr Gilmour in 1848, deeded the the Chapel to five Trustees for the use of a Baptist Church in Peterborough, (which Church professed and practised open communion) and the deed was in the hands of the Trustees and not in Mr. Gilmour's possession; through the neglect of said Trustees, the deed was not registered.

3rd. Mr Gilmour, when asked by the said Regular Baptist Church—a denomination not in existence when the Chapel was built—in July last, to give them a Deed of the Chapel, called the four surviving original Trustees together, laid the request of the said Church before them, and asked them to instruct him how to act, as he said he would be guided entirely by their decision in the matter. Three of the said Trustees recommended him to execute a deed of the Property to five Trustees, in trust for a Baptist Church of the same faith and order as the one to which he formerly deeded it. One Trustee dissented.

Mr Gilmour did as the majority of the original Trustees recommended; these three Trustees are in the present trust. The "proper owners" of a property are most assuredly those whose pecuniary means have been expended thereon.

4th. We know that the "amusement" for Mr. Gilmour to preach in the Baptist Chapel was not "a step in the plan for Mr. Gilmour to take the property."

5. Mr Gilmour made no demand for the keys of the chapel. The Trustees notified the Regular Baptist Church that Mr. Gilmour would preach in the afternoon, and asked where they could obtain the key, desiring them to communicate with one of their number named. No communication was received through him.

Mr. Gilmour received a communication from five of their number, stating that he would not be allowed the use of the chapel, but, notice having been given Mr. Gilmour had to fulfil his appointment, believing, as we did also, that the doors would be open to him who had so often preached there—and by whose means the place was chiefly built. Mr. Gilmour had no need to go there to "excite public sympathy."

Whatever has been done we are responsible for it and not Mr. Gilmour.

PRESBYTERIANISM vs. BAPTISM

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR:—"A Looker on" who is one of your correspondents, in your issue of the 18th inst. is miserably deficient in his sight. For instance in speaking of the mode of Baptism he says "the probabilities are all in favour of pouring or sprinkling." Here he ought to see that his probabilities will not be accepted inasmuch as they prove nothing—they are mere conjecture. Again he says "of the several persons referred to in the New Testament, three were in the open air, two in private houses, one in a jail and one in a city;" and there is no authority for asserting that either (it ought to be say) of them was by immersion. Now here he makes his assertion to oppose the assertion—as he calls it—of those who believe different from himself, but he ought to see that either pouring or sprinkling is baptism. Whereas the Scriptures declare that "there is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism."—Again he speaks of a modern Traveller of unquestionable veracity who says that the whole neighbourhood of Jerusalem, during nine months of the year is as dry as a bone, during the other three months the rain descends in torrents. Now let this be true and what then? Are we to look at that land Palestine now in its desolate and deserted condition, was it the same before the gospel dispensation, or in the days of our Lord and his apostles? for we do not read in the New Testament of any lack of water, and the promise of God to the Israelites by Moses was surely fulfilled. Deut. 8. 7. "For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills." Now there was plenty of water throughout the whole land, he also promised them the early and the latter rain, the only time that we read of in which they lacked water was in the reign of the wicked Ahab, when it rained not on earth for three years and six months, and even then there was some brooks throughout the land, at least there was one which supplied Elijs and his hostess and family, and no doubt the neighbourhood round, far and near. And we read of David and his household, and his army at one time passing over the brook Kidron, and in later times John the Baptist found much water in Enon, and our Lord and his disciples must have had much water where they baptised,—and if possible they needed more than John—for "he made and baptized more disciples than John." And let any one look at a map of that good land, (Palestine,) a land of fountain and streams and see the innumerable streams that empty themselves into the river Jordan, the sea as to the correctness of the statement and then say who has been guilty of the foxy tricks.

Recollect that Mr. Stephenson's land is bounded on the east by the road, hence all the settlers on that concession can procure their complement of land and Mr. Stephenson must be content with what they leave him, they may thrust him over the fence on to the road after he has cleared his land and brought it into a high state of cultivation—yes, and paid for it besides, yet, according to Publicola's views, it would be no act of injustice.

Yours &c.,
PHRENO-MESMERISM.

TO THE ORANGEMEN OF CANADA.

DEAR BROTHERS:

In an address to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales you find an embodiment of principle and sentiment which vibrates and cheers the heart as our well known motto is proclaimed through its pages, "No Surrender!" Those principles which now are only beginning to be understood and appreciated by the enslaved and down-trodden nations of Europe. Let us pause and inquire if our principles as Protestant Orangemen will stand investigation—shall we not find when the touchstone of truth is applied to our Order there is now much alloy. Alas! Alas! a great many have enrolled themselves among us not to sustain principles whose purity is unimpeachable, but for self aggrandisement—this sentiment under correct guidance is proper to enable and elevate our race, and place in the hands of all mankind the grand lever of our elevation, the unmutilated word of the Most High God of Heaven and earth. What do we find there? but an embodiment of love, a sentiment that cheers, invigorates and renews the nature of man. We, brethren, profess to be guided by those high and holy principles, let us put them in practice. We are said to be a religious and not a political society. Can it be possible to separate civil and religious liberty? No! No! they strengthen and support each other, our laws must be in union with our sentiments. To accomplish those glorious results we must unite. Read the history of that great man whom we revere: Union! Union! was his watchword, his fatherland had suffered from the tyranny and despotism of Louis of France. The waters of the rolling deep were brought to their aid, while alone the roar of the deafening surge pealed their battle cry "Do or die," and most nobly did our Prince of Orange perform his part of the sacrifice. Let us like our brave ancestors be up and doing. United we stand—Victory is ours. Our opponents are united in secret conclave, their recent triumphs are urging them on to further aggressions. Let the Cartier Government be as chaff before the whirlwind of Protestant principle. Let us form a party under the name of Whig we know they supported and sustained Wm. of Orange, he was no party man but took aid and support from all who would forward the great work he had in view—deliverance, emancipation from French despotism and popish influence. In reading Macaulay's history of England you will find a faithful account of the numerous Lundys of that day, let us in the future trust none but tried and honest men who will not sell us for a "mess of pottage." We are now under the domination of Rome. Arise! arise! or be forever fallen,—to the Polls and tell the Smiths and Benjamins to retire and give place to honest men. What is our object in throwing these Jonahs overboard; Nothing more than that peace and plenty, civil and religious liberty be established in this beloved and splendid country, fearlessly and unrestrictedly canvoting to liberty's song. Let the fighting but truly loyal sons of Canada ask themselves why it is that almost a third of their hard earnings goes to support a corrupt faction, every third pound of tea, every third suit of imported clothes, every article almost we require from abroad, one third rivets your chains, also, the public domain squandered local improvement made at your own expense.—What is required of our rulers is honesty of purpose and determination to seek and promote the true interest of this rising colony. The remedy for all the ills of our body politic will be a united Whig party, composed of Farmers and Mechanics, Merchants, &c., &c. Let our password be "Forward, ! No Surrender!!" and rally around our old and venerated Whig friend Rattan the hero of 1812 to the Polls and let supporters of the Duke know Britons never will be slaves. Give a united vote, come all to the poll early the first day with loyal hearts and determined wills in support of those glorious principles, and our lady Queen,—May God bless her.

I am, as ever,
Your old friend and Bro.,
JAMES HARVEY.

In consequence of the liberal premiums offered, the Show was considerably larger than usual, and in several of the classes a good deal of improvement was observable. In that of sheep (Leicester), the improvement was great, attributable mainly to the recent introduction of imported breed.—Pigs were shown of the pure Suffolk breed. The show of grains, roots and vegetables was exceedingly good; the same may be said of all articles in the produce department.

The Committee would take this opportunity of returning thanks to Messrs. Waram, Garbut, Walton, Blizard, Kennedy and Easton for their efficient services as Judges on the occasion.

BAPTISM OF THE REV. H. GRATTAN GUINNES.

The Rev. H. G. Guinness was baptised on Saturday evening last, Sept. 29th, in Somersett Street Chapel, Bath. After singing and prayer, Mr. Guinness gave an address to a crowded and attentive audience. He said that for five years the subject had occupied his attention, and that he had come at length to the conclusion that believers in the Lord should be baptised. During his public ministry he had been asked to baptise infants and adults; but he declined the former because he considered it to be unscriptural, and the latter because he had not been baptised himself on a profession of faith. After reading to his audience the various portions of scripture which refer to the mode, the subject, the design and obligation of baptism, he strongly urged believers in Christ not to plead ignorance of this important matter, nor to permit indifference, or prejudice, or pride, to keep them from the delightful privilege of being buried with Him in baptism. After prayer he was baptised by Lord Congleton. Mr. Salton, of Bridesford, then addressed the meeting on the subject of earnestness in seeking and securing the blessing of the gospel. Mr. Code brought the interesting service to a close by prayer.—London Freeman.

TWO PERSONS CRUELY MURDERED!

The inhabitants of our quiet town were thrown into a fearful state of excitement this morning in consequence of a report being circulated to the effect that two persons—man and wife—Abraham and Sarah Peterson had been cruelly murdered in cold blood at their residence, about five miles from Pictou, on the road leading to Demoresville. On careful inquiry the report was found to be too true. The particulars are substantially as follows: Last night, according to the statements of a boy (who when a child was left at the residence of the murdered man) there were no strangers in the house at bedtime, nor did he know anything of the heartless occurence until morning. The scene on entering the house was indescribable.—Near the door lay Mrs. Peterson weltering in her blood, quite dead; on one side of her lay some wood which had been set on fire, and which had horribly burned the leg of the deceased, but afterwards gone out. On her head were some large cuts from the effects of which she must have been killed instantaneously. In a bed in the same room lay Mr. Peterson. He also had received some deep cuts on the head, and had evidently struggled but little. The instrument used in the accomplishment of these horrid transactions was a common pick-axe, which was found in another room, thus conclusively shewing that Peterson was not the murderer. The house seems to have been pillaged. This is substantiated by the fact that the contents of a bureau had been emptied on the floor; the lower drawer was found to be locked; this was effected by withdrawing the second drawer from the bottom from its place, and then the accomplishment of the task was easy. This all goes to show that the murderers—for their must have been more than one—were actuated by gain alone, and probably were successful in obtaining some considerable amount of money—this however is only a conjecture.

We hope that no exertion will be spared to bring the cruel and heathen wretches, who thus deprived two human beings of life, to justice. These murders have cast a gloom over the whole community, and the earnest wish of all is that the perpetrators may be found out and brought to justice. About a year ago Mr. Peterson and wife suffered greatly from aberration of the mind, but eventually recovered, and since that time we have not learned that anything wrong has place with regard to them till the above distressing news has reached us.

An inquest is being held, but the investigation not been concluded.—Pictou Gazette Extra. 13th.

The cattle trade on the New York Central is very brisk. Before the close of the present year it will have brought to Albany since January 1st, about 175,000 head, and the total number of live stock brought down will be in the neighborhood of half a million.

NENA SAHIB TURNED UP AGAIN.

(From the Bengal Harkaru.)
Gorruckpore, August 16.

All doubt about Nena is cleared up: he is still alive, though I fear out of our reach. A man who was taken away from this district, and has been for some time a prisoner in the rebel camp, has returned. He is very ill, but every care is taken of him, so that there is hope of his recovery. Government has ordered the man's depositions to be taken and forwarded to the proper quarters. Report gives this as his tale:—"The Nena and his friends, before leaving Nepaul, cut off his little finger, and performed all the ceremonies of a funeral, as of leaving their whole bodies in holy India. This being done, they entered upon their march to the north, and had escaped through a pass to the other side of the snowy range; and the camp consists of a force, so report goes, of 10,000 men and 13 guns. It appears they left Nepaul about the time when the last notice of the rebels appeared in your paper. At leaving, they were joined by a brigade from Central India."

WINTER PROTECTION FOR TREES.

BY W. C. STRONG, IN GARDENER'S CHRONICLE.

In the cold latitude of New England this subject is becoming increasingly important. Whether because our forests are cleared, and the open country gives more sweep to the wind, or the winters are colder, or a richer cultivation is in practice, and vegetation is more rank and succulent, or because more artificial and delicate varieties of fruit are in vogue,—whether from one or all of these causes certain it is, that the proportion of failures from the effects of winter is discouragingly on the increase. A knowledge of the cause is a step towards a cure.—Doubtless these causes vary in differing cases; but it would seem reasonable to expect that careful observation would teach us wherein lies our greatest danger. The past winter is specially worthy of note, both from its peculiarity, and the severity of its effects. In this region it is the universal experience that evergreens, vines, fruit trees passed through a scathing trial. In the early part of December the winter closed in suddenly and with considerable severity, and a cause is found in this fact by many. But in December the sap of trees is most thoroughly absorbed, and consequently the trees are in the best condition to endure cold. Unless an unusually warm November should cause a flow of sap, it would seem as though December and January were the seasons of greatest endurance. Excepting the rather mild cold term of December, which was yet by no means so cold as many nights in January, the winter of 1858–9 was apparently favorable, and only moderately cold. A careful examination of evergreens on the 1st of March convinced me that they had passed the winter with unusual vigor. I am strongly inclined to think this was also true of all deciduous trees. After a mild March and indications of an early spring and on the third of April set in for four successive days, raged a fierce, dry, cold north-west wind. The cold was not intense but sufficient to freeze the ground and prevent plowing, which is not unusual at that season. But the wind was intensely trying, harsh and dry, far worse to endure than the coldest zero weather. Why should it not be so true for plants as of animals? Why should the wind that dries and chaps and cracks the skin, not also cause excessive evaporation of plants, suck out their juices and leave them in all stages of exhaustion? The effects of the April winds were very apparent. Trees that were protected by a hedge, were uninjured to the top of the hedge; but they ventured above the hedgeline, their tops were cut off as with a knife. The outside north-west ranks of nursery trees stood the brunt and suffered like the front ranks of a phalanx. Wherever trees have had the shelter of other trees, or a favorable position, they have come out the past spring with great vigor; but in exposed places, even the Rock Maple has been greatly weakened, and many branches killed outright. While it is doubtless true that trees are oftentimes killed by the intensity of cold alone, yet reason and facts seem also to indicate that the harsh dry winds, that are so trying to animal life, are equally injurious to vegetable life, and are much more commonly the cause of "winter-killing" than simple intense cold.

If this view is correct, it is very satisfactory to the horticulturist; for the cause, on its face suggests a remedy. Sheltered positions can be found, or shelter can be created. Hardy evergreens seem to be the most perfectly adapted for this purpose, and I would name the Austrian and Scotch Pines as the most perfect of all. Their power of endurance is beyond any other evergreen with which I am acquainted, and the ragged foliage forms an admirable break to the wind. But while simple shelter is ordinarily quite sufficient for most kinds of fruit trees, or at least all that can be practicably given, there are other kinds that will repay for ample protection. I confess to some surprise that so much is made of the extreme hardiness of this or that variety of grape, for instance. We hear an introducer claim that though his "variety may not be the best, yet it is remarkably hardy." Not long since, a friend and distinguished cultivator of the grape was pouring out to me the mortality, among some varieties, from the effect of cold. I asked him why he did not protect them. He replied that unless a variety could look into the very teeth of a north-wester, and stand the trust of all weather, it should have immediate leave to retire from the list. Now, I shall express my opinion with the same boldness and my that, by this rule he must disband his whole army, (for he is trying them all.)

The truth is, we have no perfectly hardy table grapes for New England. Doubtless they may break at the proper time, and with tolerable strength in most instances but at best they are what we call hardy perpetual roses. They are hardy; but every cultivator knows how much more vigorously they break and flower if they have winter protection. Am I asked if I would protect the Concord of Hartford? Certainly, by all means; lay them down like raspberries. No other labor will yield such proportionate reward. And it seems to be of minor importance that the Rebecca is scarcely able to endure open exposure. Compared with the ample returns in vigor and abundance of fruit, it is so simple and easy to cover vines with earth, as raspberries, that I should suppose the practice would be adopted by all vineyardists. Even the Peach may repay for this treatment in Massachusetts. This year's crop in a total failure. In the spring a premium was offered for a dozen peach blossoms from any one orchard; yet I know an instance where branches were covered with earth during winter, and they are now loaded with fruit.

In conclusion, beyond the absolutely "killed," is not the weakening process of winter exposure a more important evil than we are accustomed to regard it? and are not judicious expenditures for shelter and protection of prime importance to the horticulturist?

Shortly but surely was death approaching, when the little girl took from the shelf [slyly] what she supposed to be a stick of Candy, and ate near all of it without suspecting it to be anything else, but fortunately it was a stick of Dr. Keenie's Dead Shot Candy, which her father had purchased the day before for his other children, the next day she was relieved of over sixty worms, some of them 10 inches long. Consumption has left a child in now fast gaining her health and strength. How many children are annually dying from the prevalence of worms in the system. WINTER PROTECTION FOR TREES.

BY W. C. STRONG, IN GARDENER'S CHRONICLE.

In the cold latitude of New England this subject is becoming increasingly important. Whether because our forests are cleared, and the open country gives more sweep to the wind, or the winters are colder, or a richer cultivation is in practice, and vegetation is more rank and succulent, or because more artificial and delicate varieties of fruit are in vogue,—whether from one or all of these causes certain it is,that the proportion of failures from the effects of winter is discouragingly on the increase. A knowledge of the cause is a step towards a cure.—Doubtless these causes vary in differing cases; but it would seem reasonable to expect that careful observation would teach us wherein lies our greatest danger. The past winter is specially worthy of note,both from its peculiarity, and the severity of its effects. In this region it is the universal experience that evergreens, vines, fruit trees passed through a scathing trial. In the early part of December the winter closed in suddenly and with considerable severity, and a cause is found in this fact by many. But in December the sap of trees is most thoroughly absorbed, and consequently the trees are in the best condition to endure cold. Unless an unusually warm November should cause a flow of sap, it would seem as though December and January were the seasons of greatest endurance. Excepting the rather usual cold term of December, which was yet by no means as cold as many nights in January, the winter of 1858–9 was apparently favorable, and only moderately cold. A careful examination of evergreens on the 1st of March convinced me that they had passed the winter with unusual vigor. I am strongly inclined to think this was also true of all deciduous trees. After a mild March and indications of an early spring and on the third of April and for four successive days, raged a furce, dry, cold north-west wind. The cold was not intense but sufficient to freeze the ground and prevent plowing, which is not unusual a: that reason. But the wind was intensely trying, harsh and dry, far worse to endure than the coldest zero-weather. Why should it not be as true for plants as of animals? Why should the wind that dries and chaps and cracks the skin, not also cause excessive evaporation of plants, suck out their juices and leave them in all stages of exhaustion? The effects of the April wind were very apparent. Trees that were protected by a hedge, were uninjured to the top of the hedge; but they ventured above the hedgeline, their tops were cut off as with a knife. The outside north-west ranks of nursery trees stood the brunt and suffered like the front ranks of a phalanx. Wherever trees have had the shelter of other trees, or a favorable position, they have come out the past spring with great vigor; but in exposed places, even the Rock Maple has been greatly weakened, and many branches killed outright. While it is doubtless true that trees are oftentimes killed by the intensity of cold alone, yet reason and facts seem also to indicate that the harsh dry winds, that are so trying to animal life, are equally injurious to vegetable life, and are much more commonly the cause of "winter-killing" than simple intense cold.

If this view is correct, it is very satisfactory to the horticulturist; for the cause, on its face suggests a remedy. Sheltered positions can be found, or shelter can be erected. Hardy exergreens seem to be the most perfectly adapted for this purpose, and I would name the Austrian and Scotch Pines as the most perfect of all. Their power of endurance is beyond any other evergreen with which I am acquainted, and the rugged foliage forms an admirable break to the wind. But while simple shelter is ordinarily quite sufficient for most kinds of fruit trees, or at least all that can be practicably given, there are other kinds that will repay for ample protection. I confess to some surprise that so much is made of the extreme hardiness of this or that variety of grape, for instance. We hear an introducer claim that though his "variety may not be the best, yet it is remarkably hardy." Not long since, a friend and distinguished cultivator of the grape was pointing out to me the mortality, among some varieties, from the effect of cold. I asked him why he did not protect them. He replied that unless a variety could look into the very teeth of a north-wester, and stand the brunt of all weather, it should have immediate leave to retire from the list. Now, I shall express my opinion with the same boldness and say that,by this rule he must disband his whole army, (for he is trying them all.)

The truth is, we have no perfectly hardy table grapes for New England. Doubtless they may break at the proper time, and with tolerable strength in most instances but at best they are what we call hardy perpetual roses. They are hardy; but every cultivator knows how much more vigorously they break and flower if they have winter protection. Am I asked if I would protect the Concord of Hartford? Certainly, by all means; lay them down like raspberries. No other labor will yield such proportionate reward. And it seems to be of minor importance that the Rebecca is scarcely able to endure open exposure. Compared with the ample returns in vigor and abundance of fruit, it is so simple and easy to cover vines with earth, as raspberries, that I should suppose the practice would be adopted by all vineyardists. Even the Peach may repay for this treatment in Massachusetts. This year's crop is a total failure. In the spring a premium was offered for a dozen peach blossoms from any one orchard; yes I know an instance where branches were covered with earth during winter, and they are now loaded with fruit.

In conclusion, beyond the absolutely "killed," is not the weakening process of winter exposure a more important evil than we are accustomed to regard it? and are not judicious expenditures for shelter and protection of prime importance to the horticulturist?

THE paragraph copied from the Peterboro' Examiner entitled "A Prince's Feather" in the issue of the Montreal Herald of the 30th ultimo, seems to have raised the ire of Messrs. Strachan & Smith, and their friends. We would state that while we humbly congratulate Messrs. S. & S. on the honor they received in supplying the Bread and Rolls, the "Granite Mills Plough Flour" of Peterborough was selected for the purposes specified in that paragraph, their intentions to the contrary notwithstanding.

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

The C. W. F. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men who know your requirements, whose sympathies are with you, and to whom sentody your interests may safely be entrusted.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which dominates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that diseases within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitality. As a consequence of these properties, the foretold who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and sterling.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been rescued from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitates what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained ground by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and performed cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or for better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

THE WANING OF SUMMER.

Oh the winds are softly sighing—
Summer's dying, summer's dying;
She is passing from the earth
That smiled brightly on her birth,
Fast away.

And the pleasant woodland bowers,
And the flowers—fragile flowers—
And the birds' sweet matin song
With the leaves they built among,
Pass away.

Ah! the little birds are flying,
Far deserying, far descrying
The approach of frost and snow,
They are leaving us; for now
Summer dies.

And the soft breese, too, grows bolder,
And its breath is growing colder;
And all fair things now seem dearer,
When we know departures nearer.
More we prise.

Ah! the winds are sighing, sighing,
Summer's dying, Summer's dying;
And a shade falls o'er the heart
As we see our joys depart,
One by one.

And although to-day is sorrow
A to-morrow—bright to-morrow—
May arise and chase away
All the shadows of to-day
While we mourn.

THE FIDDLER'S QUARREL.

A TALE WITH A MORAL.

William Hodge was a quiet, inoffensive man, moving in a very humble walk of life, which he filled with great credit to himself, and with great satisfaction to every body else. His calling was, not, perhaps, a very dignified, but it was at least a very honest one. Willie was by profession an itinerant fiddler. He had the misfortune at an early age to loose his eyesight by the smallpox; and as this calamity, aggravated as it was by poverty, precluded him from competing with the world in any of its more ordinary occupations, he turned his attention to music as a means of earning a livelihood; and he could not, perhaps, even although he had his eyesight, have made a better choice, or one more suited to his genius, for he possessed a natural talent for the musical art, had a correct ear, and an excellent taste.

Thus qualified by nature for the profession which necessity had compelled him to adopt, Willie made rapid progress in the art of handling the bow, and soon became an expert and skillful fiddler. Having attained such a degree of proficiency as he thought might warrant him in making a public appearance, Willie, one evening, fiddle in hand, sought a quiet retired street, where he believed he should not be known, and there made his debut. It was a successful one. He bagged a brace of sixpences, six brace of penny-pieces, and somewhere about a score of half-pence. Willie went home rejoicing; and enthusiastic as he was in his profession, he thought the music of the clink in his pocket that night far surpassed the finest tones of his fiddle. From this hour, Willie became a regular public performer, and soon after a well-known and much admired public character. Besides his street practice, Willie enjoyed a fair share of private employment. He was very frequently engaged for weddings, balls, and other festive meetings in the environs of Edinburgh; and it was on one of these occasions, that Willie became acquainted with Jamie Dowie, a brother in trade and in misfortune—Jamie being also blind, and a fiddler.

The acquaintance of these two worthies first begun by Willie borrowing Jamie's rosin, which was given with a frankness and cordiality that at once won Willie's heart. Their intimacy thus begun, soon ripened into a sincere and ardent friendship. They became inseparable companions, and finally went into a partnership, playing together in the streets, and dividing the benevolence of the public between them. Their fiddles were not more in unison than were the sentiments and dispositions of the fiddlers. In all respects, the harmony between them was perfect, and was most pleasant to behold. If Willie got an invitation in his professional capacity to a merry-making, he was sure if the thing was at all practicable, to lug in Jamie along with him; and Jamie when he happened to be the person who was preferred, did the same kind office by Willie.—In short, no friendship between two mortal men could be more disinterested or more intense. There was no rivalry, no feeling of jealousy between them. Willie rejoiced at Jamie's jobs, and Jamie felt no less happiness in Willie's. They assisted each other, too, with the greatest readiness and cordiality, on occasions when remuneration for one only was allowed, without fee or reward beyond the stray tumblers of porter, or half-tumblers of toddy, that were from time to time handed up to them, by way of increasing the energies of their elbows. It is true that on such occasions as these alluded to, the employed party invariably offered the other the half of his earnings; but equally true is it, that this offer was never accepted.

For many years this most exemplary friendship between Willie Hodge and Jamie Dowie continued with unabated fervor; nor during all that time, had there ever been the slightest deference even of the most temporary nature between them.

No quarrel, not an angry word. Some people though it was too good to last; but those who thought so, knew nothing of the intensity of their feelings—knew nothing of the more than brotherly love that existed between the two blind fiddlers, and the test of years should have satisfied them of the groundlessness of fears. The occurrence must have been an extraordinary one indeed, that could have divided two such fond hearts. Certes, however, such an occurrence might present itself.

Although the street and the dancing-room were the chief marts to which Willie and Jamie brought their music, yet they did not always confine themselves to these fields of operation. They were both possessed of an adventurous and enterprising spirit, and to occasional speculations in steam not much beat excursions, when they sometimes picked up something considerable; but as Willie often said: "It was just a lottery, and couldna be depended on. I hae seen us, he would add, when speaking confidentially to a friend, 'play frae Port Hopetoun to Lock 16 without turnin' a penny, and at anither time, I've seen us bag half-a-croon before we got to Rathie.' This state of the case, Jamie, when present always corroborated. Both Jamie and Willie, therefore, gave a decided preference, on the whole to the regular, steady business of the street where the average of their earning was at once pretty regular, and fair in amount.

One little strait amongst many in the friendship of the two fiddlers, was their occasionally retiring after the labors of the evening, and taking a social gill together. No more, however—not a drop; and even this only on occasions of great unwonted success.

We have said that there were those who doubted the uninterrupted duration of the love of Willie and Jamie; but we at the same time remarked as the reader will recollect, that these persons had no good grounds to go upon for any such insinuation. We also admitted, however, that it was certainly quite possible, that something might occur to disturb the harmony between them perfect and long continued as it has been. In truth, such a circumstance, sorry are we to say it, did occur. The demon of mischief, envious of their felicity, resolved to mar it, but, using no supernatural agency, he set about effecting his diabolical purpose by mere human means. We will explain it.

One night as Willie and Jamie were performing together in a certain quiet street in the city, a person dressed like a gentleman, and in other respects, to all appearance, really such, came up to them, and after listening for a short time with evident satisfaction to their music, which was indeed very agreeable to hear, he requested them to play a particular air. They complied. The stranger bespoke another and another; and when they had played somewhere about half-a-dozen tunes he plunged his hand into his pocket, making a jingling noise with the silver it contained. Then withdrawing his hand: 'You play uncommonly well, my good fellows,' he said in a loud and kindly tone of voice; 'there's half a crown for you.' In the same instant Willie's and Jamie's hands were at their hats in grateful and respectful acknowledgement of the generous donation. Nothing further passed at the moment. The donor departed, and the musicians resumed their occupation.

It is not known whether it was by accident or design—whether it was the natural emanation of a happy frame of mind, or proceeded from a sense of appropriateness; but the first tune Willie and his colleague played after the announciation of 'there's half-a-crown for you,' was 'Money in both pockets'; and it was remarked that all the tunes they played subsequently that night were of a lively character.

The stranger who had thus made the two street-minstrels so happy had, in the meantime, as already noticed, departed; but it was some little time before the fiddlers ascertained this, and not knowing but he was still present they refrained from making any remarks to each other on the windfall which had just come their way. On becoming aware of his absence, which they shortly did by that sort of intuitive tact for which the blind are remarkable, Jamie sidled towards his colleague, and whispered in his ear: 'You'll staun a gill the nicht, Willie, eh!' Willie smiled, and dare-said he might. 'A liberal gentleman yon,' remarked Jamie.

'Just uncommon,' said Willie.

'A guid judge o' music,' rejoined the former.

'Pays weel for't, at onyrate,' replied the latter.

'What wad ye think, then, o' our drinkin' his health?' inquired Jamie.

'Nae objection in the world,' replied his colleague; and the blind musicians slipped their fiddles into their green bags, and taking each other lovingly by the arm, they immediately proceeded to a certain tavern which they were in the habit of frequenting.

'Weel, what shall it be?' quoth Jamie.

'Oh, I fancy just the auld thing o'er again Jamie,' replied Willie; 'a gill o' the best—real Ferintosh.'

'Exactly, so be it,' said his friend; and in a few seconds the liquor was before them.

Delighted with each other, and in high spirit with the good luck of the evening, Jamie proposed what we called a repetition of the dose—that is, another gill. Willie at once assented, and another gill was accordingly ordered, and in due time, discussed; the love and kindness of the parties for each other having in the meantime gradually advanced towards a climax.

Having finished the second gill, and some little desultory conversation after it, Willie proposed that they should 'be moving.'

'Its full time, responded Jamie.

'We've had a lang sederunt, but it's been a happy ane. I'll pu' the bell, and ye'll settle the reckonin'.'

Willie sniggered and laughed, having reasons of his own for believing that his friend was trying his hand at a joke, and said: 'I'm thinkin' ye're better able to settle the reckonin' the nicht than I am, Jamie.'

Jamie now smiled in turn, for he also had reasons for thinking that his colleague was jesting with him. 'I dinnin see how that can be, Willie, he said, 'and you wi' half-a-croon in your pouch.'

'Me half-a-croon in my pouch!' exclaimed Willie with considerable earnestness, perceiving something serious in the tone of his friend's last remark; 'the deil a half-croon's in my pouch: but I'm thinkin,' he added with a smile, 'I could fin't in yours, Jamie.'

'My word, but ye wad be clever if ye could,' said Jamie somewhat drily; a suspicion, for the first time, of his friend's perfect integrity crossing his mind.

'Ah, ye're a sumain' shaver,' said Willie laughing. 'But come, man, Jamie, cuttie, for it's gettin' late.'

'Bottle yon, Willie,' replied Jamie, with decided impatience in his manner; 'tars on ye the purse-bearer? Hae on ye the half croon?'

'Me the half-croon!' exclaimed Willie in amazement. 'What do ye mean, Jamie? I suppose ye hae wool enough that I have on the half-croon, and as weel do ye hae, I'm thinkin,' that you hae't yoursel.' It was to you he gied it.'

'Are ye in earnest, Willie?' said Jamie, gravely and emphatically. 'If no, it's a weel onecth between freens; but if ye are, and mean to deny that you got the half-croon, ye're no the man I took ye for, but one better than ye should be, maybe no see guid."

"To be sure I do mean to deny that I got the half-croon," replied Willie sternly, indignant at the hypothetical insinuation unfavourable to his honesty which his colleague had just made. "You got the half-croon and it's a dirty trick o' you to deny it. I wadna hae expected it o' you, Jamie.'

"What! wad ye mak a rogue o' me?' shouted Jamie fiercely, and at the same time seizing Willie roughly by the collar.

"Ye're made a rogue o' yoursel', man,' roared out Willie, returning the hostile grasp of his late friend.

"You got the half-croon?'—"You got the half-croon?'—"It was you got the half-croon.'

"It was you got the half-croon,' was fiercely bandied from the one to the other for several seconds, while they stood in the belligerent attitude just described.

The choler of both being at length excited to fighting-pitch by the provoking irritation of the obnoxious accusation, and their reason being for the time blinded by the effects of the Ferintosh, a deadly struggle ensued. At the first roll of the combatants the table, with all its furniture of glasses, jugs, and bottles was sent over with a tremendous crash. At the next, down went Willie with all his weight, and some additional impetus besides, from the nervous arm of Jamie, on his own fiddle crushing it into a thousand pieces. It had been lying on the seat beside its owner, and down on it, as we have said, Willie had been vigorously planted by his antagonist. On ascertaining that it was his fiddle that had perished, Willie loosened hold of the enemy, and groping about for an instant, got hold of Jamie's violin, which, having drawn from its receptacle, he grasped by the neck, and in a twinkling battered it to pieces about the ears of its owner.

The breadwinners demolished, the combatants again closed in deadly strife, and hugged and tugged each other with the most relentless ferocity. At this moment two gentlemen, who had witnessed the progress of the quarrel, and subsequent combat between the two musicians, from an adjacent part of the room, stepped up to them, and after separating them, inquired what was the cause of the quarrel.

"That—that—man—there,' said Willie, breathless with agitation and exertion, and pointing to his colleague, "has cheated me o' half-a-croon, or at least o' fifteen pence.'

"It's a lie, gentlemen—it's a barefaced lie, shouted Jamie in great wrath, and as breathless as his antagonist; "it's him that has cheated me, he got the half-crown.'

"What half-crown?' said one of the gentlemen.

The history of the half-crown was forthwith given by Jamie. "But are you perfectly sure that either of you got it?' inquired the gentlemen.

The question at once took Willie and Jamie all aback. It was a poeser. A new light on the subject instantly and suddenly fell upon them, and the possibility of the facts of the case for the first time crossed their minds, but they did not immediately admit it.

"Why I suppose there can be nae doot that ane o' us got the half-croon,' said Jamie, rather sheepishly, and with an expression that plainly enough shewed that he did now very much doubt it. "I heard the gentleman distinctly say: "There's half-a-croon for ye,' so that ane o' us maun hae got it, I should think.'

"I should doubt it, however,' replied the gentleman.

"You are two honest-looking men, and wouldn't, I am sure cheat each other out of a paltry half-crown. I rather think you have been tricked—made the subject of a hoax.'

The two unfortunate minstrels could no longer withstand the conviction that they had been regularly duped, and a deep sense of shame took possession of their hearts, for having, even for a moment suspected each other's honesty. The truth, moreover flashed upon them, that they had, in their drunken folly destroyed their fiddles—the sole means of their support. The agony of the poor repentant wretches can hardly be described. Lamenting with bitter tears the folly of their conduct, they sat them down and cried over the shattered fragments of their instruments, declaring they should now have no other resource but in begging from door to door for their subsistence.

The case having attained this dismal juncture, the gentleman who first addressed them, spoke as follows:—"Now, my good fellows, since you have had your pipe out, and seen what a couple of fools you have made yourselves; I have to tell that it was I who played you the trick that has caused you all this mischief.'

"You sir! said how could you do sic a cruel thing to us?' cried both the lachrymose fiddlers at once.

'That I shall tell you, replied the gentleman. 'You must know I wished to perform an experiment upon you. Everybody told me that your friendship for each other was inviolable; but this I doubted; and as I executed the plan of pretending to give one of you half-a-crown, knowing that you would in all likelihood adjourn to a public-house, where, on this occasion, you would be certain to quarrel. If you had been persons who never took drams, I should not have thought of trying such a scheme. Take my advice, my good fellows; in future save your money, and have nothing more to do with gills—remember the auld Scots proverb 'When drink's in, wit's out."

"That's our true a tale,' answered Willie; 'but what are we to do noo? We'll just be twa objects without our fiddles. O, dear sir, we canna stand it—canna stand it; you're best cowe cuit on us, sir; you shouldna have leeten us gang this length.'

'Well, Willie, to shew you that it's all a piece of fun, though done to try if your friendship would stand the test of whiskey, here is a crown-piece for you, by way of solatium, and call upon me to-morrow morning, when I will give each of you as good a fiddle as those you have demolished.' So saying, and putting the money into their hands respectfully, along with a note of his address, the gentlemen departed, followed by the thanks of the now happy and reconciled friends.

MORAL.

This lesson was not thrown away upon Willie Hodge and Jamie Dowie. An understanding was established between the two fiddlers, that they should never in future take any one's word for giving them half-a-crown, or any other sum, so far as to suspect each other's integrity, far less to engage in mortal combat on such hypothetical grounds. And, moreover, what was best of all, they vowed they should henceforth abstain from tasting a drop of spirits, justly observing, that 'there was nae saying what might be the consequences; for drinking was sure to lead to mischief as yay or anither.'

AN ADVENTURE ON THE CARS.

There were five of us—yes, five as happy fellows as were let ever looses from college. It was 'vacation,' and we concluded to take a trip to the Falls. We got aboard the cars at N——, and were soon travelling very rapidly toward our destination.

We had just seated ourselves and prepared for a comfortable smoke, when in came the conductor, and who should it be but our old friend B——. After the common salutations—"How are you old fellow, &c.,—had passed, Fred said he had some business for us to attend to.

"Out with it, old chum," said we, "any thing at all will be acceptable, so let us have it."

"Well, boys," said Fred, in a very confidential tone, "in that next car there is as loving a pair as it was ever my lot to see. They are going down to H——, to get married, and now if you can have fun over it, just pitch in. They must be cared for, and I don't know who can do it better than you."

In a moment Fred was gone, and we set our heads together to form some plan for taking care of the lovers.

"I have it, boys," said Bill Seevers, "we must have that girl think that her lover is married—"

"That's it," said we, not giving him time to finish the sentence.

"That he is a married man and the father of children," said Bill.

"That's the game, boys! now let us play it."

It devolved upon me to commence operations. Accordingly I entered the car in which we were informed the lovers were. Sure enough, there they were, in real soft lovers' style.

All this I gathered at a glance. Stepping up to them, I said:

"Why, Jones, what in the duce are you doing with this girl?"

"See here, stranger," said the fellow, "you are a mite mistaken. My name ain't Jones."

"Why, Jones," said I, "you certainly have not left your wife and children, and tried to palm yourself off for a single man, have you!"

"I tell you my name ain't Jones; it's Harper. It never was Jones; tain't a going to be neither."

I merely shook my head, and passed on to another seat to see the rest of the fun. The girl looked wild after I sat down; but Jones alias Harper soon convinced her that I was mistaken.

About the time they got feeling right well again, in came Elliot Gregg. Walking up to Harper, he accosted him with:

"Why, Jones, you here! How did you leave your wife and babies?"

"Now, see here, stranger, you ain't the first man that's called me Jones to-day, and I reckon I must look awfully like him, but I ain't Jones, and more'n that, you mustn't call me Jones. I hain't got a wife, nor babies either: but this ere gal and me is going to splice, an' then you can talk about my wife, and I would not wonder but that in the course of time you might talk about the babies too; but you must not call me Jones.',

This brought vociferous laughter from the spectators, and it also brought blushes to the face of "the girl that was going to be spliced."

"Ah, Jones," said Gregg, "you will regret this in the future. I pity your wife and children and this poor girl."

"So, Mr. Harper, your real name is Jones, is it; and you have been footing me, have you? Well, we ain't spliced yet and I don't think we will be soon," said the girl, and her eyes fairly flashed fire.

"Jane! Jane!" said Harper, "don't you know I'm Bill Harper? That ain't a darn drop of Jones blood in me, and I'll prove it!"

At this moment Jefferson Jackson, Bill Seevers and Jim Byers entered, and of course their attention was called to Harper by his loud talking. They stepped up to him and said:

"Why, Jones, what in this fuss about?"

This was more than Harper could stand. He leaped upon a seat.

"Now," said he, "my name ain't Jones, and I can lick the fellar that says it is."

By the time we had got to H——, and our friend Fred came into the car and made Harper keep quiet. The girl that wouldn't be spliced requested Fred to help her on the train that was going back to N——, which he did, and the notorious Jones alias Harper followed. We learned afterward that he proved himself to be Bill Harper instead of Bill Jones, and he and his gal Jane "got spliced."

A rough old captain, in a storm, who, when the terrified passengers pummeled him to petition Heaven for a cessation of the tempest, preferred the following brief request: "Oh, Lord! I haven't been in the habit of calling upon thee often; and if you'll shift the wind from south-west to a little more south, I won't trouble you again."

The old fogy who poked his head from behind the times had it knocked soundly by a "passing event."

FROM "LIFE'S RIVER," AN UNPUBLISHED POEM, by T. E. ROBERTSON.

PART II.

In solemn conclave at th' Olympian court
The nuptials of the East and West performed
To jubilant response aroused the world;
Old Vulcan taxed his hammer's nicest skill,
And Neptune from the Equator's burning line,
Urged his swift dolphins to the favor'd zone;
Jove emptied his right fist of thunderbolts
And threw them in the sea; Atlanta's nymphs
Bore the rough offerings to their deepest caves
And taught gruff Tempest to respect the gift.
Came from the sunny south a joyous band,
Came from the shadows of the forest land
The youthful daughters of old Eastern lords,
Came trooping downward to the Eastern sea,
With gold, and gems, and wreaths of matchless bloom
With snoodless tress and beaded moccasin,
And hatted scarf but veiling half their charms—
In nuptual jubilance and wealth of joy
To grace the wedding of the Hemispheres.
Beauty and mirth, and music trooping came,
Yet, first and fairest of that Queenly band
Grouped on old Ocean's marge, fair Canada
Thou stood the fairest of the loving fair,
With grace a Doric Queen might imitate.
The sun-brown'd hand unfurl'd a length of scroll
The Prince of Moeedon had proudly owned
That parchment, mud engrossed, was signed by Heaven.
Of brine-wash'd shores and shores of brineless seas,
Doted with peopled plains and templed hills,
River, and Lake, and Isle, and Forest vast,
The deed of half the western sphere thine own,
Dwarfs Eastern Empires into Provinces!
Queen of the West, loved Canada, thy land,
Bound by no myth to yonder Arsenal
Of human-weal, the North-sea's light-girt rock—
Soon, zoned from tide to tide with freighted keel
And the wheel'd thunders of the shocking car,
From sea to lake, from lake to sea afar
Shall Orient climes pour tribute at thy feet
And the wide-world in peace shall gather there and feast.

Here's wealth for millions, homes for half the world;
Fair fields and sunny skies, floods, woods and mines
Await the coming throng.
Ho, Westward, ho!
Welcome ye millions, half the world is ours,
It's peace, and wealth, and beauty come and share!
Here independence rears her log-hut, rears
An altar to her God—the God of Heaven,
And thronging millions sing around the Fane!
Yes, praise we more than pray, for what of earth,
Here need we more than what we now possess!
Our cup with earthly blessing overflows
And Gospel graces crown exultant Faith.
Then, let our prayers be brief; our virtues stoop
To raise the fallen without asking leave;
Faith upward looks and Hope expands her wings,
And, angels ravished with a new-born joy,
Ever evolving, yet forever new,
Seraphic adoration breaks to song.
Then, brief our prayers be, long and loud our praise;
Freedom in head and heart is ours! Sing ye
To Him to whom we owe the priceless boon.
The Autocrat shall never touch our strand,
Or comes he, he aspires to be a man;
Nor shall the democratic mob-born slave—
His younger brother—hear our forest's joy.
In the deep forest sing we as we toil
The song of freedom, sung by all the trees;
Manhood and virtue—Earth and Holiness;
Voicing their gladness as its prompting bids.
Ye of the stars and stripes; confusion burns
Upon your Nation's brow; there let it burn;
There let its fork'd flames lick up the springs
Of mental life, and lop its shooting forks
Around your bolstered self-reliance—burn
Till emptied in the throne of intellect
Of its joint heart-and-soul-blight occupance;
Lapped round and scorched, and born upon the forks
Of that flame into the edying shades that loom
Darkly upon the future! Where? Born where?
No matter where, if born beyond the power
To further curse our race!
Up freemen, up!
Cease ye to own what manhood dare not own,
Cease ye to do what manhood scorns! arise,
Mammon's a curse that ever falls upon
It's dupes most surely! Dare ye to be men
Confront your nation's foe—like men confront,
And dare to dash that idol from its throne!
Man feels his birth-right Freedom and he speaks;—
The Democratic devil grasps his threat
And hangs the shrieking martyr to a tree.
Freemen! base prostitution of a name
The virtues boast, the Christian's noblest boon,
Freemen, theme! Freemen! dregs of sin,
Bits of the flesh that thrilled tyrants fond
Their profane dog in lands where mob-power reigns,
Gaoscoape and cull, dowsed down to their own curse,
Conjured by Satan into manhood's shape!
Freemen! never see that title more.
Hot, Northward!
Northward, look across our line,
And you will know that yet to you gish hope,
The heart-proof wealth of life, and joy, and power,
That manhood owns, enjoying all its own!
Northward! There 's room; although the mark of Cain
Be on thy brow, there 's Balm in Gilead!
Northward! There 's room; ye prodigals, there 's room!
Ye erring sons of Japheth, come, there 's room!
Let misconceptions hedge your way no more;
Hear ye, ye Freemen, whose sole freedom is
The vast inflation of your bloodless rant,—
Free as the airs that stir our own old woods,
The foot of slave shall never touch our soil!
O, glorious boast! We thank thee, Heaven, for it.
Ham wills to be a Freeman, and he steps
Within our border, but without his chain—
The bounds let slip upon his trail by freemen
Snuff the north-wind, then turn upon their track!
Ho! northward, ho,
Northward! actuated in he who chains his kind,
Northward, enslavers! and escape your doom,
Northward! the tint of skin is not a crime,
Fraternize with the mighty love of Christ,
Emotions all-pervading human weal,
Feel and acknowledge that ye are of us;
The same God made us all, and all are God's,
Japheth and Ham were brothers—so are we.

THE PRINCE AND ARTEMUS WARD.

Artemus Ward, the showman, the man of many experiences and unbridled humour, has seen the Prince. The interview between these distinguished persons is supposed to have taken place at Sarnia, and A. Ward, Esq., tells his story as follows:

He handed me a cigar, and we sot down on the Piazza, and commenst smokin rite cheerful.

"Wall," sez I "Albert Edward, how's the old folks?"

"Her Majesty and the Prince are well," he sed.

"Dus the old man take his Lager regular?"

The Prince larfed and intermated that the old man didn't let many kegs of that beverige spile in the cellar in the course of a year. We sot and tawkid there sum time about matters and things, and bimeby I asked him how he liked bein a Prince as fur as heed got.

"To speak plain, Mister Ward," he sed, "I don't like it. I'm sick of all the bowin and scrapin and crawlin and hurrain over a boy like me. I wood rather go threw the country quietly and enjoy myself in my own way. When the people cheer me—I feel pleased; for I know they mean it, but if these one-horse offalshuls good, know how I see threw all their moves and understand exactly what they are after, and know'd how I larf at em in private, they'd stop sinnin my hase, and fawnin over me as they now do. But you know, Mister Ward, I can't hold bein a Prince, and I must do all I kin to fit myself for the persishun I must sum time occupy."

"That' troo," sez I, "sickness and the doctors will carry the Queen orf one of these day, sure's yure born."

The time havin arove for me to take my departer, I rose and sed: "Albert Edward, I must go, but previs to doin so I will observe that you soot me. Yure a good feller Albert Edward, and tho I'm agin Princes as a general thing, I must say I like the cut of yure Gib. When you get to be King try and be as good a man as yure mother has bin. Be just and be jenerus, especshully to showmen, who have often bin aboozed sins the days of Noah, who was the first man to go into the menadgery business, and of the daily papers of his day to be believed. Noah's collecktshun of livin and wild beests exsightin ever seen since tho I make bold to dowt of his sinkere wha ahead of mine. Albert Edward, adoo!" I took his hand which he shook warmly, & givin him a perpetool free pass to my show, and also passes to take home for the Queen & Old Albert, I put on my hat and walkt away.

"Mrs. Ward," I solileekwised, as I walkt along, "Mrs. Ward, if ye could see your husband now just as he's proudly emergin from the presents of the jnout King of Ingland, yood be sorry you called him a Beast just beeawse he cum home tired & hite and wanted to go to bed without takin orf his boots. Yood be sorry for trying to deprive yure husband of the priceless boon of liberty, Betsy Jane!"

FEDERATION OF THE COLONIES.

The St. John (N.B) Reporter has an article upon the federation of the British North American provinces. Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia it considers good enough to be allied with New Brunswick, but as for Canada, they will have none of it. The Reporter says:—

"Turning our attention to Canada, in this programme of the Colonies, we find much to engage our consideration. There we find a people already far advanced on the pathway of constitutional freedom to national greatness and prosperity. With a country of great extent and fertility, abounding in almost every variety of climate, soil and productions—with inland seas and rivers, the greatest in the world—with forests almost equal to our own, and with agricultural productions second to none in the world, and only wanting an outlet such as ours for their exportation, it would at first sight seem as if the question of an alliance with such a country could not admit of doubt enough to induce discussion. Nevertheless, we have doubts on the prudence on our part, of such an alliance at the present period, and we have no hesitation in stating them as the result of our reading and calm consideration.

"In the first place we find the Province of Canada burthened with an enormous debt for so new a country, and much of it probably induced by a system of extravagance, bordering, we fear, in many instances upon provincial corruption. The operations of an English company, the very name of which has to us always been mixed with just abhorrence—and from the grasp of which our Province happily got free, though at a heavy cost—have in Canada produced a full harvest of expense in the first place, and disappointment in the next. And now, the case in come to this—that although the railroads have in that country cost the enormous sum of £19,000 per mile, the contractors, nevertheless, declare their inability to proceed an inch further without an additional subsidy; being, we believe, the third of the kind which they have already demanded! Speaking on this subject, the correspondent of the Times characterizes the inauguration of the Victoria Bridge as the laying of a tombstone over £7,000,000 of the public money! And such we fear it will probably rest for a long time—certainly until the productions of the country find a conveyance through British territory to British markets; thus securing their own carrying trade all the way between the producer and consumer.

"In the next place, the old constitution of Canada recognizes a difference of races with distinct laws and usages for their respective local positions. Of these in their contradictory—almost hostile—character, we have of late heard more than enough both in and out of the course of legislation, to create our thorough disgust, and sooner than connect ourselves with such an evil, provided it should still continue as it has done hitherto, we should prefer forever to remain alone.

"In these Provinces, whatever may have been our political squabbles, the great heart of the people has ever remained truly British; and we desire no connection with a people who, while they occupy British soil, have their affections set upon the re-conquest of their country by the despot son of a Frenchman.

"Lastly, we can have no desire to identify ourselves with the religious dissentions which are, and have been for some time past, so unhappily prevalent in Canada, and which threaten to destroy the social blessings of peace and harmony in that Province. This subject we will not dwell upon at present; nor will we affirm how far the whole objections which we have urged may or may not hereafter be removed. We wish for information, based upon the sound principles of reason and judgment, not upon the impulsive display of any greatness for which we may not yet be prepared. We are charmed by the project, but the questions proposed are—may we accomplish it with safety? and may it have even a thorough discussion previous to the construction of a railroad from the St. Lawrence to the Bay of Fundy?"

THE ANONYMITY OF THE PRESS.

The practical bearing which ought to characterise the Social Science Association's proceedings seems to have been conspicuous by its absence from Section A of the Social Economy department on Thursday. Professor Craik proposes what he calls "a Plan for the more Effective Discussion of Public Questions." Any one desirous of making a political or social innovation is advised henceforth not to get it "written about or speechified about," but to offer himself to the world at large for examination on its merits. The questions and answers are to be taken down and published. What is this but getting the subject "written about and speechified about" in a round-about manner—or rather, perchance, running the risk of not getting it considered at all? The would-be innovator may give an ecumenical challenge to examiners; but will they come when he doth call for them? Invitations that are general as to time are very seldom accepted, and this, no doubt, would also be the case with those that were general as to person. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, even in matters of admitted utility—to test the claims of a political or social innovator—by ninety-nine persons out of a hundred, regarded when he commences his career as a presumptuous, paradoxical simcompoop—how many judges would prefer themselves?—Suppose, however, the examiners found and the examination reported, is not this getting the project "speechified about" and affording it an opportunity of being "written about?" Why not, then, give the news, report the information at first-hand, and where possible, secure their advocacy?—Without it few innovators are likely to find favor with the public, even if they succeeded in obtaining an introduction to it by Professor Craik's plan, which seems, on the other hand, precisely adapted to keep all revolutionary projects permanently in petto.

Save for the circumstances of their reproduction, the worn-out arguments adduced by Mr. V. Haven on the worn topic of "Anonymous writing in the public press" would not merit reluctant refutation. His defending of the "ostensible object" of the newspaper press as being a wish "to convey the most accurate information, the highest morality, and the soundest political principles to its readers," although a little too much in the style of the Dial's prospectus, may be taken as a tolerably fair statement of the intentions of that portion of the newspaper press amongst whose subscribers there exists a decent fashion of respectability. How would these intentions be influenced by compelling every contribution to a newspaper to be signed by its author or acknowledged by a known and responsible editor? As to the latter requirement, in nine cases out of ten editors are known and responsible publishers, whose responsibility to every article in his paper is already paid in the imprint. As, under all circumstances, the discretionary power must be exercised by the editor, or conductor, of the journal for a time, absolute necessity to father the utterances of impersonal paper is already quite sufficiently complied with.

Mr. Hawes inquires why an editor should write anonymously any more than a preacher deliver his sermon behind a screen? The question is simply childish. The screen would be an acoustic obstacle in the way of a man who wants to make people hear him. The journalist's anonymity is no critical obstacle in the way of a man who only wants the people to read him—indeed it enables his articles to be judged by their own merits. If articles were signed, well-known names would prejudice appraisement and deprive unknown of a fair share of attention. So long as rhetoric is rich, or reasoning forcible, what does it matter who wrote? If morality can only be supported, as Mr. Hawes insinuates, "by known and able men," what are our ethical prospects when the known men die off? Is it not possible that an unknown man may possess ability? Is it not rather hard to wish to deprive him of a chance of becoming known? Mr. Hastings' remark that "the journals which adopted the system of attaching the names of the contributors to their papers were every day gaining in estimation" is a puzzling one. Where in the British political world do such journals exist?—Scotsman.

—Numerous arrests have taken place in Hungary on account of the dissemination of revolutionary proclamations. The military classes of 1856, '57, '58, '59, '60, comprising young men of the age of sixteen years, have been called to service. The levy will terminate on the 31st of December next.

THE MAN OF THE AGE.

Characteristic of the greatest men of the age, we learn from recent advices that Garibaldi has had all the old police agents of the King of Naples sent to the islands of Tremiti, and will keep them there until he shall be able to make further arrangements. Such a measure was absolutely necessary for their safety. He cannot set them at liberty, nor do they even wish to be set at liberty, for the people would at once tear them to pieces. Meanwhile he gives to the respective families of these wretched creatures the regular pay and rations of a common soldier. By a special decree he has suppressed all the convents of the Jesuits, and has confiscated their property to the use of the State. A number of ladies, mothers, wives, sisters, daughters of the political prisoners in Naples, have waited on Garibaldi to thank him for having restored those who were dearest to them to the bosoms of their families. Amongst others was the Signora Antonietta Poerio. A certain Signoria Biola acted as spokeswoman for the rest. Garibaldi replied that he felt sufficiently rewarded by such a scene for all the toils and dangers he had undergone, but he added that his mission was not yet finished.

THE HAMILTON ORANGE RESOLUTIONS.

During the past week a meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge has been held in the City of Hamilton at which sundry resolutions have been passed connected with the late visit of the Prince of Wales. We take these resolutions as the say of the united wisdom in the Body upon the stirring events lately agitating the Province, and while we find much that we approve therein we fail to discover the validity of the premises from which the objectionable sequences are drawn. Not being initiated or possessing acquaintance with all the principles of the "Order" as taught in their constitution we cannot speak authoritatively as to the objects and aims of the organization, but we have supposed its main aim was to maintain the integrity of the throne and the supremacy of the Protestant religion—that beyond this and the usual charities of a benevolent Society, the Orange Institution, as such, had no legitimate business. But like all Societies of the kind when it travels beyond its prescribed formula it gets into difficulties and the consequence of that departure from first principles exhibits often the unbecoming spectacle of division and strife. Some of our best benevolent organizations have been shattered by introducing objects foreign to the design of the institution and the leaders taking advantage of the facilities afforded have employed the power at command to enforce their favorite dogmas, and in fact have incorporated them into the very constitution itself. No wonder that reflecting men become careless at first and then give up all connection with the Society as it has travelled out of its sphere, and meddled with subjects never contemplated when the Society was organized. So we fear it will be with the Orange Society if its leaders are not more careful. Twenty three resolutions, strung together without mover or seconder named, have been published to the world, and while they appear all well enough as you read one after another if not careful to note the transition, one may pass over some very serious points to which exception may be taken. No 17 of these resolutions is one of this number, wherein the sentiment is clearly held forth that the Government of Canada in consequence of the manner in which they acted in reference to the late visit of the Prince of Wales "have forfeited all claim to the confidence of the Orangemen of Western Canada," and the Right Worshipful Grand Lodge is bound further to declare that the mode of redress is to "withdraw from them the direct and indirect support of the loyal Orange body." This is taking high ground indeed, and though the Grand Lodge sends forth its mandate, it will not be heeded by the body, as every Orangeman at all conversant with the principles upon which the Order is founded knows that uniformity in politics or the subscription to a political creed are matters not in the province of the Lodge to enforce. The right of private judgment is one the Orangeman cherishes, and will not easily part with it, and for the Grand Lodge or any other tribunal to enforce political proscription or censor to any Administration is to him a behest he is not bound to obey. We say this not on account of any regard we have for the Ministry, but merely express our conviction of the doubt we entertain of the wisdom or prudence of the Grand Lodge in endorsing and publishing such a resolution. It is morally impossible to get a body of men to agree on all matters—men will think and act for themselves, and when no moral obligation is involved members of that body will think and act in direct opposition to their fellows.

The less we say of this imposition upon bodies the better for all concerned, and while it is positively in harmony with organizations to express opinions upon passing events, let the matter drop here and not seek to enforce uniformity in matters irrelevant to that Organization.

—The polling in Newcastle Division commences to-morrow.

THE NEWSPAPER TAX.

In view of the early meeting of Parliament the press of all political stamps are up and demanding the abolition of the obnoxious newspaper postage. It will be remembered that during last Session petitions were sent in in great numbers, praying for the removal of the obnoxious tax, but seemingly no head was taken of them. Everybody looked for Mr. Brown to take the initiative, but for reasons best known to themselves neither Mr. Brown, Mr. McDougal, nor any other member of the Opposition could be found even to enter a notice of motion. A promise was made the Press Association by certain parties, supposed to speak the will of Ministers, that things would be put to rights. This lulled their minds and stayed their efforts till the Session came to a close, and then they found they had been deceived by vain promises. We are glad to see the agitation commenced early this Season, and feel satisfied that Government will yield to so loud and unanimous a demand for the repeal of the burden on knowledge. The Montreal Pilot (a semi-official organ of the Ministry) has "full faith that when Parliament meets an act to this effect will be introduced by the Postmaster General, with the sanction and concurrence of the entire Cabinet."

THE HARVEST AND CROPS IN BRITAIN.

We learn by late English papers that the weather during the last of September and first of the present month has been very favorable for securing the cereals in the United Kingdom. That the question of questions, as to the price of bread, has been in a great measure decided, and from all we can glean we are led to believe the facts of the case to be that an average crop of wheat has been housed in Britain, but so much of it in a very damp and grown state as to require large imports of foreign grain to mix with it for milling purposes. It appears further that the usual countries in Europe from which imports were made will have little if any to spare. Russia has not. France has prohibited the export of wheat or flour. All eyes are therefore directed towards America, which a kind Providence has blessed with abundance and to spare. Our farmers will therefore be sure to realize a fair price for their wheat. As the price is still good we again urge our friends to embrace the present prices, as fluctuations are frequent. Since we last issued the price has receeded five cents in the bushel, 6s now being the price paid for the best samples of fall wheat.

ACCIDENT.

A melancholy accident occurred in the neighborhood of Omemee last week, attended with fatal consequences. We are informed that a poor Irish laborer named Maginity was with the assistance of another man, moving his shanty from where it stood to another site within view. His assistant and himself were cutting the brace-pole on which the boards of the shanty had been fastened, when from the other end being cut unexpectedly soon, the end which Maginity was employed in cutting fell over with great force on his head, causing a deep indention in his skull. Though Maginity walked about for a few days after the occurrence, yet on Monday, the 29th instant, when going out to work, and having called for a drink of water, he fell into a swoon, and continued delerious until Tuesday, the 30th, when death relieved him of his sufferings. Deceased leaves behind him a wife and family.

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE.

Rochester papers report a shock of an earthquake having been felt in that city and vicinity, of about thirty seconds duration, on Friday morning last. Accounts from Oswego also report that a convulsion was visible there, accompanied by the usual rumbling sounds and the jarring of tin and crockery ware. No serious damage was done in either place.

☞ Remember the Lecture of S. M. Hewlitt in the Town Hall to-night. Prof. Hewlit has a reputation of being only second to Gough as an Orator, and his powers of description and imitation are spoken highly of.

CLOTHES STEALING.—Two or three instances of clothes-line stripping have occurred in Town lately. Mr. Jas. Mitchell had about $30 worth of light clothes stolen from a clothes line on his premises, on Simcoe Street, a few nights ago.

HALLOW EVE.—Last night the boys were bent on mischief, and set fire to the arch on Hunter Street, about midnight. The arch was reduced to ashes, but no damage was done to any other property.

THE GENESEE FARMER.—The November number of the Genesee Farmer is received. Among its contents may be mentioned accounts of the New York, Ohio, Michigan, Iowa and New Hampshire State Fairs; a full report of the Evening discussions at the New York State Fair, and a report of the discussions at the last meeting of the Western New York Fruit-Growers' Society. Its leading article is on "Fattening Sheep in Winter," followed by many other reasonable and interesting articles on agricultural and horticultural subjects. We would again recommend the Genesee Farmer to our readers. It is so cheap that all can afford to take it, even if they already subscribe for several other agricultural papers. It costs only fifty cents a year, and the publisher offers to send the last three months of this year free to all who subscribe now for 1861. Send the fifty cents in stamps, or get one of your neighbors to join with you and send a dollar bill, to Jas. Hoyts, Rochester, N. Y., and take the paper for fifteen months. We notice in the present number a list of forty-three subjects for Prize Essays. The Farmer may be ordered at the Office of the Examiner, Peterborough.

—The newspapers tell us that at a recent sale at the palace at York, some of the port of the late archbishop realized 140s. per dozen, and the amount obtained by the sale of the whole of the wines was £2,416. A very pleasant reflection to the poor curates of York province, half starving on their fifty pounds a year, to think that their deceased archbishop could keep in his cellar a stock of wine worth a sum the interest of which is equal to the stipend of four of their order.

—A strange and terrible incident is said to have happened "near Paris." A boy, ten years of age, hanged himself for fear of being sent away from home to one of the Paris schools. A companion of about the same age, when he heard of the death of his friend, said "Poor Julien! I shall hang myself too." After the funeral, however, the latter recovered his spirits, at least to all appearance; but the other day he also was found to have hanged himself.

Scotland, especially throughout the midland counties, was visited by a severe storm on Wednesday morning, the 3rd inst. So severe, indeed, was the hurricane that it is currently affirmed by the newspapers, no storm anything like equal in violence to this has been experienced since the year 1811. There has been great destruction of property all over, and we regret having to add that there has been also serious loss of life. The storm was also felt seriously on the Irish and English coasts.

—Relief for the starving people of Kansas is beginning to be sent to that territory. A despatch from Atchison, dated October 25th, says:—Several thousand pounds of flour, corn meal, and potatoes arrived to-day from Illinois, and several teams from the destitute portions of Southern Kansas, which were in waiting, were loaded and started for their destination. There has previously arrived and been distributed from this point five hundred bushels of corn and twenty thousand pounds of flour, groceries, potatoes, &c., most of which was sent to the Neosho country.

—Latest intelligence shows that the shock of the late Earthquake was felt as far east as Father Point; West, very slightly, as far as Toronto, and even Hamilton; South, as far as Troy, N. Y., while of its extent northward not much is yet known, in consequence of the absence of telegraphs. On the river Ouelle, in Kamouraska, the shock was there severer than anywhere else. The buildings on both sides of the river suffered considerable damage; chimneys were toppled with the shock; the crew of the church fell, and pictures were thrown from walls. This is the nearest approach to any serious damage being done that we have yet heard of.

EDMISON vs. STEPHENSON.

SIR,—"Phreno-mesmerism" has mesmerized himself on my remarks on Jury trials, and become a little phrenetic on the subject. But after the Judge had deliberately stated that one party (Stephenson) was in possession of land undoubtedly belonging by deed to Edmison, and that the surveyors on both sides agreed in that; only that he thought Stephenson had held the land for twenty years while the other party, not expecting that he would play the shabby trick of just keeping it twenty years had given notice some ten or twelve years ago, but not in legal form, having at the same time more land belonging to Stephenson, which he only waited a proper opportunity to restore on equal terms; I think the Jury did right in regarding such a proceeding as a mere legal quirk, and deciding that if such was law, it was an absurd law, and its application to such a case in such a country an abuse of law; and I trust if the lawyers rule that such is law, another jury will again repeat their sentence that it is not justice. I am under the impression that Edmison offered to pay half the expense and only hesitated at being made to pay the whole. As to the remarks of your Monaghan friend I have only to say that in my opinion the honesty of Juries is the safeguard of our liberties and possessions; and while I accord just respect to lawyers, am fully persuaded that an unbiassed jury is the best judge of justice. The personal character of the parties I leave in the hands of the public to whom they are both well known, and I believe their judgment is likely to be just.

I am, Mr. Editor,
Your obed't servant,
PUBLICOLA.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR,—I hope my former letter will appear with this in your next, for though occupying less than half the space, I am not less grateful.

I am sorry to waste so many words on Baptism, as it is little else than wasting time thus to slay the slain. "Philalethes" will be gratified to learn that my proofs have been sometime in Mr. Gilmour's hands waiting a further adjustment to meet his views. Truth I believe is on my side, and therefore I am not afraid to show my tactics for truth is strong. My previous communication more than meets Mr. Gilmour's remarks. "Philalethes" calls my statement of the 18th scurrilous. Is truth scurrilous? And because I remind him of the follies and vices of the Anabaptists of former days, which is matter of history, is that scurrilous? And now he gives the false accusations of their adversaries against the Waldenses and Albigenses, (only a small sect of the latter having denied Infant Baptism along with Infant Salvation,) while their own historian Perin gives documentary evidence of the strongest kind, their confessions of faith and catechisms to show that they abhorred Anabaptism. And then he brings in the Jesuits as witnesses to the principles of the Anabaptists! But he does not tell us why they are so favourable to that cause! If those very learned men also whom he parades so, were in earnest in their eulogy of Anabaptism, why were they not immersed? Is it to the use of the term house "Philalethes" objects? I beg to ask Mr. Reepes who knows all about the Baptism at Jordon, Ænon, and elsewhere, whether they used such an article at those, or whether they had to go in naked? and if the latter, who held their clothes, (Acts VII. 58,) a very necessary precaution in those thievish times! Does it not strike "Philalethes" as singular that neither men nor women found any difficulty either in stripping or finding water, or being surprised by persecutors in that awkward state, during so many years: when we find from the time dipping commenced (for their was dipping though no Anabaptists in the days of darkness, till it become a disgust even to barbarians,) such things occured continually, where there was dipping; and never when there was no dipping, as was frequently the case even in those times of grossest superstition. I must also in passing tell Mr. Reepes, that his spectacles must have got misty, when he can find streams in the Desert of Gaza, while Dr. Robinson who searched all around, found nothing to immerse in within thirty miles, but a well which it was more easy to get into than to get out of. But what wonder that an uneducated man should fall into the ditch, when led by such blind guides as Guiness, who after five years study does not know that our Saviour was not let down into a grave, as the dead are with us, which is merely a vulgar error, but laid up in a niche or shelf in a cave hewn out of the side of a rock: not to speak of the misinterpretation of the text otherwise, from which the allusion is supposed to be taken. Romans 6: 3, 4. For any one who can read English will see that believers are baptised not into Christ's burial, but into Christ's death; (a baptism by sprinkling of blood on the cross). And thus by putting on Christ, being united with Christ, his members are crucified with him, buried with him, raised with him, sit with him, reign with him as their head, Eph. 2, while the corresponding passage, Col. 2, 11–15, cuts up Anabaptism root and branch, by calling Baptism the circumcision of Christ, to which it is analogous, and of which it makes his members partakers in him: which was also a Baptism by the sprinkling of blood administered to unconscious infants, a seal of the covenant of God made with unconscious infants, and which they might unconsciously break, Gen. 17, 14, (just as with Baptism now,) and which according to Mr. R's notions was not only useless, but cruel and absurd! What does "Philalethes" mean by my bold assertions? Is it my condemnation of matters which are so well known as not to require explanation by any who understands the subject; and which cannot be pressed into a letter like this, but may be found at full length fresh from the original sources in Wall's History of Infant Baptism, which "Philalethes" would do well to consult before writing further.

In conclusion I make a heavy charge against the whole tribe of Anabaptists and Rationalists—that they deny the personal agency of the Holy Spirit and the Divinity of Christ, and with these the only reasonable or possible ground of human redemption; thus proving their descent from the Paulicians, and other Manichees, by similarity of doctrine, not only in practices but in express words as my four opponents abundantly show. Let them clear themselves of this charge if they can. And meantime I remain Mr. Editor, with apologies for the unavoidable length of my letters,

Yours, very truly,
VOX VERITATIS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I am sorry to have to use so many words to prove a plain scripture doctrine. But as my opponents have no firm principles but slide away like muddy water, I am compelled as it were to stake and board them, that I may keep them to common sense. I will carry Mr. Gilmour's famous right forward, just as they stand. As to the importance of Baptism, there is a Baptism indispensable to salvation, and that is of God the Spirit, John 3, 6–3, and Rom. 8, 9. But water Baptism is also an imperative duty on all who have the opportunity whether young or old, for I find no age mentioned; and what infants cannot do for themselves, must be done for them by others, parents, &c; as to feed and clothe their bodies, so their souls; and this is by teaching, 1st Peter, 2, 2, and baptising, Rom. 6, 3. A child may live without these almost, but scarcely altogether without miracle; and hence the heathen child so far as the parents are concerned, dies a heathen; which is a well known fact: whereas the child of the christian is holy, 1st Cor. 7, 14, and christians are thus a holy nation, 1st Peter 2, 9. Does Mr. Gilmour think any one would become a christian of himself? If not, whatever Mr. G. may think of the justice of the case, he must of necessity depend on others; and on whom more naturally or rationally than on his parents? I felt before that Anabaptism is a subversion of christianity, and now I know it, from Mr. Baptist and from Mr. Gilmour, both of whom deny that a child can believe, and consequently can be saved: for there is no salvation promised in Scripture without faith as the first act of reception, a faith which is the operation of the Spirit, and may be hereditary, and therefore personal at the earliest age, 2nd Tim. 1, 5, and 2, 15, by which we see Timothy both inherited faith and possessed it from a child, so that the Scriptures made him wise unto salvation. And the mode of this regeneration is first by water and then by the Spirit, John 3, 5, and Titus 3, 5, at least, so far as appears in children. When therefore I speak of "a slight idea" of Anabaptism I do not mean a slight error. Baptism, Mr. G. says, is either a relative or personal duty; it cannot be both." Now if it cannot be both it must be relative, for no man can baptise himself. But I see no reason why it may not be both to some extent. It is the duty of a parent to teach his child, Eph. 6:4. But if a parent neglects his duty it is the child's duty to teach himself, John 5:39. And in regard to the justice of the case, as he calls it, does he believe in original sin? I begin to see deeper by stirring, and that the water which is muddy at the top is mud at the bottom, and a monstrous snake concealed under it. I shall wait, however, to see it turned out by Mr. G. himself.

Again Mr. G. says "they become disciples by teaching." I rather think they become disciples that they may be taught. Mr. G. has grand-children; I think they go to school and then learn. Of course you cannot baptize those who are not disciples, but neither can you teach them. They won't let you: and hence John 4.1 the apostles first made and then baptized disciples, and after that they were to be taught as Mat. 28.20 shows. But as repenting and believing are two parts of one act, so making and baptising disciples are the two acts of one process. I have answered already as to creatures, Mark 16, 15, 16, Christ commands the Gospel to be preached to every creature. Mr. Gilmour may explain how. Oldh's opinion is nothing to me, if it is to Mr. G. let him become a Pædobaptist as advised. But I am of opinion that if Mr. Gilmour is a child his grand-child is much more so. And if those whom Jesus desired to be brought to him, were children as I suppose, and if of such is the kingdom of God, surely if the like much more the actual likeness itself. Not indeed all children, but such as are brought to Christ both outwardly and inwardly, Romans 2. 28, 29. And children may have the Holy Ghost, Luke 1.15; and faith as a consequence, 1.41 and 1.80—1 Cor. 12.3. But what does Mr. Gilmour himself believe, is the first question, and I will wait for an answer, and meantime remain with thanks,

Yours very truly,
Mr. Editor,
VOX VERITATIS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—As I had not time last week to notice "A Looker-on's" letter, will you permit me to do so now? He thinks that with respect to "the mode of baptism, the probabilities are all in favor of pouring or sprinkling." Let him remember that his "probabilities" relative to "the mode of baptism" are worth nothing in connection with this positive command of God.—"Probabilities" are not proofs. But the mode of baptism is so clearly and unmistakably prescribed in Scripture, that to determine it there is no need of "probabilities," nor is there any room for admitting doubt as to the truth on this point. Baptizo, the original word, always means to immerse, never expressing anything but mode. And it is a remarkable fact that there is not found one instance in all the Greek language, in which baptizo signifies to pour or sprinkle, but invariably means to immerse. If it were not definite in its meaning what absurdity would follow; for it is an axiom that a word that applies to two modes can designate either. The Scripture tells us that there is but one Baptism, (Eph. 4, 5,) and as the word which is always employed to designate it invariably means to immerse, therefore its mode is forever set at rest.

Now this conclusion most thoroughly refutes "A Looker-on's" assertion that respecting several persons he refers to "there is no authority for asserting that they were baptized by immersion." Thus, his assertions, which are mere figments, are reduced to nothing.

All that the modern traveller he refers to tells us respecting various things, are utterly irrevalent. Though "the whole neighbourhood of Jerusalem be as dry as a bone," and not a drop of water to be found in Palestine in modern times, yet all this would not in the least affect the question at issue. That in apostolic times there was sufficient water for the administration of baptism by immersion, the Scriptures abundantly testify. This is what we have to do with, and not what modern travellers say, for some of them say strange and absurd things.

"A Looker-on" says that "near Gaza there is neither stream nor lake, at any time of the year, more than ancle deep, so that the Eunuch could not have been immersed." Let him hear what the Scripture says on the baptism of the Eunuch. "And they went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him; and when they were come up out of the water," —Acts 8, 38, 39. Mark, they went down into the water. Why so if not to be immersed? And their return is called a coming up out of the water. They could not come out of the water if they were not in it. Thus the circumstances attending the administration of the ordinance confirms the meaning of the word employed to designate it. Now if language is a medium competent to convey meaning, the meaning conveyed by this passage is this, and cannot be anything different, that the Eunuch was immersed. Indeed, the declaration respecting his baptism is so plain, that the most illiterate need be at no loss to discern the mind of the Lord on the subject. The man who can read it and not see immersion in it, must have something in his mind unfavorable to the investigation of truth. A Greek scholar, with a mind unbiassed, though he had no conscience at all, could not, as a scholar, expel immersion from this account. All the ingenuity of all the critics in the world, cannot silence the evidence of this single passage.

"A Looker-on" asks were the 3000 dipped? I answer, they were dipped, and my authority is God's testimony recorded in his word. "Then that they gladly received his word were baptized," (immersed as the word invariably means) "and the same day there were added unto them three thousand souls."—Acts 2, 41. If I believe the Bible to be God's book, then I must believe what that book testifies, though all "the concurrent testimony of every historical record relating to the Geography of Palestine, ancient and modern," be against me. I suppose it would have been just as advisable for a "A Looker-on" if he had been looking-on still, and not have thus exposed his great ignorance, or what is worse. I would ask all who are competent to judge, has he not "strayed away from the subject" of truth? Has he not "introduced subjects not at all connected with it?"

For want of time and space I can do little more than refer to the letter of D., Ashburnham, in your issue of the 18th inst. In order that the mist which seems to surround him be dispelled, I would recommend to his careful and candid consideration a vol. of the late Dr. Carson's, published by Whyte & Co., Edinburgh. Dr. Carson was designated by the Statesman, "one of the first biblical critics of the nineteenth century," and of him the Orthodox Presbyterian said, "In knowledge of the philosophy of language he is far in advance of the present age. His character as a philosophic theologian stands in the very highest rank." In the volume referred to he gives his "reasons for separating from the General Synod of Ulster." It also contains his "reply to Mr. Brown's vindication of the Presbyterian form of Church Government." One might safely say that if D. would so earnestly and carefully peruse that volume as the author examined the subject in question, which, after thorough investigation, he saw to be untenable, there is reason to believe that he would soon see the whole subject in quite a different light.

PHILALETHES.

October, 27th, 1860.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—I am happy to find that Baptism in its mode and subjects is being inquired into and discussed in the columns of your valuable paper, and though I am not immediately at the seat of action, but some 16 miles distant, and also a subscriber to the Examiner, may I hope that you will be so kind to insert in the same a few words of enquiry from me, not regarding Baptism which is in abler hands, but concerning Presbyterianism which has also been introduced.

Some trace Presbyterianism up to John Calvin; others think it was in being before his time (which is doubtful) and some think that if Presbyterianism was taught and practised by the Apostles, that the Presbyterianism at present is as much like the Apostolic as the Pope of Rome is like the great head of the Church, and that he (the Pope

Baptist correspondents, in your last issue of the Examiner. It will be admitted that a defender of a religious system, and who adopts the signature of Philalethes, or Friend of Truth should be more guarded than to expose himself recklessly to the charge of putting forth assertions glaringly at variance with the facts established in Ecclesiastical history. Philalethes says "Though they [the Baptists] were not known by the name of Baptists, there were many, even during the period referred to, both in England and on the continent of Europe who held and practiced believers baptism by immersion. About 1160 the Paulicians were numerous; the great mass of them were godly people. Of them, Mosheim says, that they rejected the baptism of infants."

Let us now refer to Mosheim chap. 5, c 11, and see what he says about the Paulicians "holding and practicing believer's baptism by immersion." "They [i. e. the Paulicians] rejected baptism, and in a more especial manner the baptism of infants, as a ceremony that was in no respect necessary to salvation. They rejected for the same reason the sacrament of the Lord's supper ....rejected all rites and ceremonies and even the Christian sacraments as destitute of any, even the least spiritual efficacy or virtue."

The next specimen of Philalethes' acquaintance with ecclesiastical history that I shall here give is the following: "The various sects that were called by the general name of Albigenses, were rejecters of infant baptism. Most of them were Baptists," &c. Now let Mosheim in the place already referred to be looked at and we then find as follows:—"In France they (the Paulicians) were called Albigenses," and under both names of course were not Baptists but Anti-baptists. Again, Philalethes says the Paterines held Baptist principles. Mosheim in the same page which I have been directing attention to says:—" In Italy they were called Paterini," &c; that is, the Paulicians were so named. If then as is confessed on all hands except by Philalethes, the Paulicians rejected sacraments (including adult and infant baptism)—and if the Albigenses and Paterines were identified with the Paulicians, as I have proved from Mosheim—the conclusion inevitably follows that neither the Paulicians, nor the Albigenses, or Paterines " were Baptists " or held Baptist principles.

HOW THE MONEY GOES!

We have now before us a ministerial organ, published in Western Canada, which, besides being in itself a curiosity, affords the best possible evidence of the corrupt expenditure of the public money, in buying up support. From the department of Crown Lands, there are no less than seventeen advertisements, though there are probably not half so many lots of public land in the county. In all, there are upwards of three columns of government advertising, which cost the public some $60 or $80 a week; while the character and circulation of the paper may be judged from the fact that there are not two columns of reading matter in the whole sheet, or about what would make half a column in the Times! The people of the town who have stomach for such an enterprize as the above, should give John A. a dinner!—Hamilton Times.

STRANGE AFFAIR.

Last Tuesday Mr McLauchlin, Coroner, held an inquest on the body of a young married woman named LaBar, a resident of Mariposa. She had been unwell for some little time with fever, but was thought to be recovering; however, on Monday, upon being placed in bed, from which she had been absent awhile, she suddenly, to all appearance, died. Not being able to arrive at the cause of the misterious demise, Mr. McLauchlin ordered a post-mortem examination, and the medical men, on examining the body, to their great surprise found it still warm and exhibiting no symptoms of any change having taken place. Of course they could not proceed with their disagreeable duty, not feeling confident that the woman was dead; nor up to a late hour yesterday, had the supposed corpse lost its above recorded signs of vitality.—Lindsay Advocate.

THE RED RIVER TRADE.

Thirty-nine of Burbank's ox teams, laden with buffalo robes, reached this city yesterday morning, from Georgetown, on the Red River of the North. These are but a small part of the caravan which left Georgetown twenty days ago—from fifty to seventy-five stopping at St. Cloud on the Upper Mississippi (above the Falls.) Yesterday afternoon the train started on their return trip, the waggons all loaded with goods for the Red River settlement, and taking up some fifty or sixty tons of British goods for the Hudson Bay Company. The teams at St. Cloud will load at that point, the goods being conveyed from this city to St Anthony, thence by steamer transport to St. Cloud. The goods will be conveyed to Georgetown this Fall, to await shipment there to Fort Garry on the Red River next Spring. Upwards of five hundred tons of goods have been forwarded by Burbank & Co, to the Red River during the past season.—St. Paul's Pioneer.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Unnecessary torture.—Palpitation of the Heart.—The bleeding, blistering, salivating and torturing method of the modern treatment of disease tends to the destruction rather than the preservation of human life. Physicians have a certain routine prescribed for their useless upwards from which there is no departure, the laws of the Medes and Persians were not more immutable than the death of this Draconian Code that condemn man to peculiar dogmas on penalty of exclusion. Untrammelled by particular rules. Holloway's system on the contrary is based on the simple laws of nature. Palpitation is often the effect of Indigestion, disorder of the stomach or nervous affections. By their action on the stomach and nerves the Pills effect a radical cure.

—The Supreme Court of the State of New York, have issued a perpetual injunction against Esteen and Jenkins for counterfeiting Ayer's Cathartic Pills, holding them responsible for the cruel imposition in what they have done and restraining them from further like injury to the public. If any class of our people more than another needs the interposition of law to shield them from imposture, it is the sick and suffering who are unable to protect themselves. A remedy so universally employed as Ayer's Pills by all classes, both to cure and to prevent disease, should as it does have every security the law can afford it, from counterfeit and imitation.—Colonist, Sabonetondy.

On Friday night a two-story wooden building belonging to the Nursery in Kingston, was destroyed by fire. The flames are thought to have been the work of an incendiary, and an inquest has been demanded by the Roman Catholic Bishop.

PROGRESS OF NEW ZEALAND.

From an English periodical for the present month, we obtain the following facts respecting the progress of the British colony of New Zealand. The authority for them is official. The climate, soil, and the general resources of the colony are of the most favorable and extraordinary character, as is generally known. A mission was established at the Bay Islands only about a quarter of a century ago, yet there is now a population of full sixty-one thousand—viz: The province of Auckland, 2,650 in New Plymouth, 11,753 in Wellington, 1,514 in Hawke's Bay, 9,272 in Nelson, 8,867 in Gasterbury, 6,944 in Otago, 51 in Stewart's Island, besides 1,896 military and their families. These are, indeed, the elements of a future empire. It is difficult to determine the precise amount of the native population—it has always been known to be scanty, and it is already surpassed in numbers, presenting a total of only some 56,000, by the population of European descent.

The European population dwell in wooden or "frame" houses, 307, and 2,326 built of various materials. The proportion of married to unmarried is 9,734 males to 23,362, and 9348 females to 15,777; this includes children. The slight excess of males over females of European descent is caused by marriages by natives, which are about 380. During seven years, the population (omitting Stewart's and Chatham Islands, and the military and their families) increased from 26,707 in 1851, to 59,277 in 1858, being an increase of nearly 122 per cent; and there is no doubt that the returns for 1859 will show a still greater proportionate increase, the immigration during the last year having been unusually large. The aggregate numbers of live stock of all kinds increased during the same period, from 209,115 to 1,727,997, and the land under crop from 29.140 to 149,965 acres, and the land fenced from, 30,070 to 235,488 acres.

The total value of imports has increased from £597,727 14s 2d in 1853, to £1,141,273 6s 10 in. 1858; and the total value of exports from £202,282 1s 10d in 1853, to £458,023 5s 9d in 1858. In the summaries of exports, the rapid advance in the exportation of wool claims especial notice. the value having increased from £66,307 19s in 1853, to £254,024 16s in 1858.—Gold appears for the first time in a separate table, shewing as export, the produce of the colony, to the value of £52,443 16s 1d in 1859, which, added to that exported in 1857 makes a total to the 31st of Dec., 1858, o £42,886 2s 3d.

This material prosperity has been accompanied by a diffusion of education. The centesimal proportion of the entire population able to read and write, according to the returns of 1851, was 54-43; the proportion, according to the census of 1858, was 63-51—being an increase of more than nine per cent. The total number returned as attending day schools, in 1851, was 3154; while, in 1858, the total amounted to 7820. The aggregate numbers attending schools of all kinds (public and private, day and Sunday) were, in 1851, 4,605; in 1858, 9,682.

Of the population of European descent, the English predominate largely, next the Scotch, and next the Irish. There is also a sprinkling of Americans, Australians, French and Germans. The larger number of these are mechanics and artificers: next, agricultural and pastoral; thirdly laborers; and fourthly, such as are engaged in trade, commerce, and manufactures. In a religious point of view, the great majority belong to the Church of England, the next greater number to the Church of Scotland.

APPALLING DEATH FROM HYDROPHOBIA.

A death from hydrophobia occurred at the alms house on Thursday last, that presented most shocking symptoms of that inscrutable disease. By some medical authorities it is contended that hydrophobia is a fable. In the present instance it was a most appalling reality, and was the more so as it was the first case that ever occured at the Almshouse. The victim was one Mary Dietrich, an industrious washerwoman, who lived in Jefferson Street, in the Nineteenth ward. Three months ago, while banging out clothes in a yard, a pet dog sprang at her and bit her arm. A physician afterwards applied caustic to the wound and cicatrized the flesh almost to the bone. This operation, however, was of no avail. The virus must have entered into the circulation, and there laid dormant until Wednesday, when the unfortunate woman went into spasms at the sight of water. She was sent to the Almshouse, where she suffered agonies such as mortal experience rarely witnesses. To assuage her intolerable thirst, small pieces of ice were offered as a substitute for water, but at the first sight of the gelid luxury she fell into convulsions, snapping and biting like an infuriated cur. The convulsions endured for some minutes, when in lucid intervals she begged the attending physician to terminate her misery by destroying her life. For about twelve hours she passed from spasm to spasm, until at length, by long perseverance in the application of chloroform, she was thrown into a deep slumber. From that slumber she awoke in eternity —a merciful relief from a degree of agony beyond anything in the experience of either nurses or physicians attached to the institution. The case will probably be reported for the medical press. It was one of the most strongly marked cases ever reported, and at a former era would have resulted in the smothering of the patient, as a relief from a disease universally conceded to be incurable.—Philadelphia Gazette.

A CITIZEN OF ILLONOIS WHIPPED TO DZATH IN TEXAS.

The Chicago Press and Tribune has a letter from Mr. Frederick Amthor, who was recently driven out of Texas on some frivolous pretence. He gives the following account of the horrible whipping which a young man received at Henderson, in that State, which resulted in death He says: "A young man from Illinois, by the name of Evans, came to Henderson, and while there was incautious enough to say that we thought the States were preferable to the States, and that he thought slavery was wrong.—These statements, so far as I hear them, he made in the mildest manner, and that only when pressed into the subject by the young men about town. I am satisfied that he never did or thought of saying anything, except what conversation on the subject was forced upon him. I had but a slight acquaintance with the young man, but I told him that he ought not to allow himself to be dragged into talking on the topic. But he was not careful. In December last this young man was taken out by a mob without trial of any kind, and whipped to death. The Henderson News Era, a paper published in Henderson justified the infamous murder, on the ground that Evans was a common thief, an Abolitionist, &c. I was shown the whip which I was informed had been the instrument of his death. It was covered with blood. I also saw what I was informed was the dead body of Evans, about three quarters of a mile from town. It was so decayed and swollen that I did not recognize it. The hogs and buzzards were eating it. It had never been buried!"

AWFUL CALAMITY!
OVER 60 LIVES LOST.—A little girl of Mr Stubbersfield, in the Township of York, has been declining in health for two years, the Doctors and near were called in but they all pronounced her in the last stages of consumption. Slowly but surely was death approaching, when the little girl took from the shelf [style] what she supposed to be a stick of Candy, ate the most all of it without suspecting it to be anything else, but fortunately it was a stick of Dr. McKenzie's Dead Shot Candy, which her father had purchased the day before for his other children, the next day she was relieved of over sixty worms, some of them 10 inches long. Consumption has left and she is now fast gaining her health and strength. How many children are annually dying from the prevalence of worms in the system, [Parents open your eyes to this fact.] One trial of Dr. McKenzie's Dead Shot Worm Candy, will satisfy the most sceptical mind. Price only 12½ sterling, 15 cents per package, or 2s., 50 cents, for four packages.—Sold by every Druggist and Medical Dealer in Europe and America.
None genuine Without a fac-simile signature of H. E. McKenzie, M. D., Glasgow, on each wrapper. See advertisement in another column.

PIGS AND PORK.

We select from a correspondent's letter the following items relative to pigs and pork. He recommends that pigs should be wintered upon two ears of corn a day, fed regularly, one at night and one in the morning, keeping them in a warm, close pen, without water. He says they will live in a sort of hibernating condition, and upon this small amount of feed keep in good condition. If watered or fed with liquid food, and kept in the cold, much of the food is expended in keeping up animal heat. The pigs should be in good condition when put up, and must be well bedded to enable them to keep warm.

"The best and most solid pork," says the same writer, "is made by rapid feeding of pigs in Autumn, which have kept thin all summer. Hogs that are kept fat through the Summer are most apt to afford soft pork, which shrinks in the pot.

"Hams, or in fact any part of the pig designed for bacon, should never be put in pickle—they are decidedly better salted dry."

In this we perfectly agree with the writer. Our practice has been to weigh the pork to be salted and the salt, giving six pounds of fine salt to one hundred pounds of pork. First sprinkle about one-fourth of an ounce of saltpetre, finely pulverized, upon a ham or shoulder, and then rub it well over with salt, and pile up the pieces just as you would pile up a lot of stove wood, in some dry room. It should be overhauled once, and the spare salt rubbed on fresh looking spots, and the pile reconstructed so as to allow the air to come to all parts. It will completely salt in as many days as a ham weighs pounds.

It should be smoked in a large airy room, by a fire of some kind of sweet, green wood—hickory is the best—and the fire should be so far off that its heat never would warm the meat, and the more gently it is smoked the better. One small fire once a day, is better than a constant smoke. Never use rotten wood for smoking. The true art of smoking meat is to impregnate it with pyroligneous acid, which can only be distilled from sound woold, and it is easiest obtained from green wood. If it is desirable to use sugar or molasses on the hams, it should be applied in advance of the salt or saltpetre. It has a preservative quality, and if used at the rate of a table-spoonful to a medium-sized ham it is not objectionable.

For pickled pork, it is advantageous to salt it in bulk, before packing in barrels. Nothing will drain off from meat thus salted, but just what should drain away. When your pork is ready to go in the barrel, pack it as tight as you can force it in, and then fill the barrel with brine—not salted water, but brine, which is water saturated with salt. Pork thus cured will keep longer than we can calculate.

To keep hams, hang them in a dry, cool room, and draw a loose cotton bag over them, and tie it tightly around the string that holds the meat. This must be done before flies come in the spring, and it will keep them away. We have kept hams prepared in this way till over three years old, and they were as much better than new ones, as ripe old cheese is better than one a day old.

AN ECCENTRIC FARMER.

The inhabitants of New-Forest in England have long been acquainted with an eccentric character named William Cutler, who some years ago quitted his farm, leaving the gathered crops in the wagons, until both the homestead, the grain, and the wagons, fell into complete decay, and erected a wretched hovel on some property belonging to the Earl of Normanton, at Ashley Heath, where he was locally designated the "Forest Robinson Crusoe." At this place he turned his attention to bee keeping. The bees proved a great annoyance to a neighboring farmer, who represented the inconvenience to which he was subjected to the Earl of Normanton; but neither entreaty nor the offer of money or another piece of land on the part of the noble Earl's agents could induce Cutler to move. A warrant of ejectment was recently obtained and it was placed for execution in the hands of a Sheriff's officer. A few days ago the officer procured plenty of help, and proceeded to put the warrant into execution. He found between 200 and 300 hives of live bees. How they were to be removed was a difficult question. Cutler moved among them in safety; they lodged upon his arm and body without stinging him; but the Sheriff's representatives experienced a sharp reception. After some manœuvring they got Cutler to the hedge bounding the place and as far as possible from the hives, which they were much afraid he would upset.—He declared he was determined to stop; and he was therefore put into a cart, the horse was driven off, and he was left on the highway, at a considerable distance from the place at which he commenced his involuntary journey. Cutler's wife, an invalid was next carefully removed by some females. The bees could not be safely meddled with in the daytime, and it took the men three whole nights to remove the bees to a piece of Cutler's land, an orchard 7 miles distant. They were stung severely, and were heartily glad when they had concluded their novel and unpleasant task.

MUSTY BARRELS.

Many barrels at this season are found to have become musty, and in that state are unfit for use. Put into them a pint of unslacked lime; pour thereon one or two gallons of water; bung up and shake the barrel; while shaking, loosen the bung occasionally, to give vent; when it has stood three to six hours, pour out, and then rinse with clean cold water. If not perfectly sweet, repeat the dose. Usually one application will be sufficient.

$100 A YEAR

AND upwards saved to the Farmers, by the Aldus Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fixed into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its chief care and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and inviting.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of our country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate cases of the lungs by its use. Such cases, when of so remarkable a character as to be generally known in the community, are publicly appended to the Medicine of its kind it has appeared to counteract observation, and whose its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what medicine to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the throat, lungs, and chest, when they can procure the Cherry Pectoral. While many inferior remedies are suffered to sink into merited oblivion, this has gained friends by every trial, confirmed by time, and established they can never forget, and purchased cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES!

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which those Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice,
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be the Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

FAIR GIRL OF FRANCE.

In a late work published by Longmans, of London, containing a collection of the writings of the late Lord T. B. Macaulay, we find the following "sweet record," which may perhaps explain why the brilliant essayist lived a bachelor:

By thy love, fair girl of France,
And the dark and tasteful glances
Which as well revealed it;
By the flush upon thy brow,
By the softly-faltered vow,
And the kiss which sealed it.

By those foreign accents dear,
Whose wild cadence on mine ear
Still in slumber lingers;
By thine eyes of sapphire splendour,
By the thrilling pressure tender
Of thy trembling fingers;

By thy pouting, by thy smiles,
And by all the varied wiles
Which so sweetly won me:
Laughter, blushes, sighs, caresses,
By thy lips and by thy tresses,
Sometimes think upon me.

Think upon the parting day.
And the tears I kissed away
From thy glowing cheek;
Think of many a dearer token,
Think of all that I have spoken,
All I may not speak.

Anecdote of a Dog.

The Lyons diligence was just going to start from Geneva. I climbed to the roof, and choose my place next the postillion: there was still a vacant seat, and the porter, after closing the door of the coupe, called "Monsieur Dermann!" A tall young man, with a German style of countenance, advanced, holding in his arms a little black greyhound, which he vainly tried to place on the roof.

"Monsieur," said he, addressing me "will you have the kindness to take up my dog?"

Bending over I took hold of the animal, and placed him on the straw at my feet. I observed that he wore a handsome silver collar, on which the following words were tastefully engraved: "Bevis—I belong to Sir Arthur Barsley, given him by Miss Clary."

His owner was, therefore an Englishman; yet my fellow-traveller, was evidently either a Swiss or a German, and his name was Dermann. Trifling as was the mystery, it excited my curiosity, and after two or three hour's pleasant conversation had established a sort of intimacy between us, I ventured to ask my companion for an explanation.

"It does not surprise me," he answered, "that this collar should puzzle you; and I shall have great pleasure in telling you the story of its wearer. Bevis belongs to me, but it is not many years since he had another master whose name is on his collar.—You will see why he still wears it. Here Bevis! speak to this gentleman."

The dog raised his head, opened his bright eyes, and laying back his long ears, uttered a sound which might well pass for a salutation.

M. Dermann placed the animal's head on his knees, and began to unfasten the collar.

Instantly Bevis drew back his head with a violent jerk, and darted toward the luggage on the hinder part of the roof. There, growling fiercely, he lay down while his muscles were stiffened and his eyes glowed with fury.

"You see monsieur, how determined he is to guard his collar; I should not like to be the man who would try to rob him of it.—Here, Bevis!" said he in a soft caressing tone, "I won't touch it again, poor fellow! Come and make friends!"

The greyhound hesitated, still growling. At length he returned slowly toward his master, and began to lick his hands; his muscles gradually relaxed, and he trembled like a leaf.

"There, boy, there," said M. Dermann, caressing him. "We won't do it again, be down now, and be quiet."

The dog nestled between his master's feet, and went to sleep. My fellow-traveller then turning toward me, began.

"I am a native of Bohhia, but I live in a little village of the Oberland, at the foot of the Grimsel. My father keeps an inn for the reception of travellers going to Saint Gothard.

"About two years since, there arrived at our house one evening a young Englishman with a pale and countenance; he travelled on foot, and was followed by a large greyhound, this Bevis whom you see. He declined taking any refreshment, and asked to be shown to his sleeping-room. We gave him one over the common hall, where we were all seated round the fire. Presently we heard him pacing rapidly up and down; from time to time uttering broken words, addressed no doubt to his dog, for the animal seemed occasionally as if replying by and sympathising with his master. At length we heard the Englishman stop, and apparently strike the dog a violent blow, for the poor beast gave a loud howl of agony, and scented as if he ran to take refuge under the bed. Then his master groaned aloud. Soon afterward he lay down, and all was quiet for the night. Early next morning he came down, looking still more pale than on the previous evening, and having paid for his lodging, he took his knapsack and resumed his journey; followed by the greyhound, who had asked nothing since their arrival, and which neither attended to take no further notice of him, than to frown when the creature ventured to caress him.

"About noon, I happened to be standing at the door looking toward the direction which the Englishman had taken when I perceived a dark object moving slowly along. Presently I heard howls of distress proceeding. Bevis a wounded dog that was dragging himself toward me. I ran to see him, and recognised the Englishman's greyhound. His throat had been cut, and he was in the last agonies. I was about to put him out of his misery, when I observed a piece of paper attached to his collar. I took it off, and found written in pencil these words: 'Whoever finds this dog, is requested to take him to Sir Arthur Barsley, Grosvenor square, London.' When I returned the animal was dead.

"Three days after, I received a letter from the Englishman, dated from Milan, in which he informed me that he had left his dog at my house, because he was convinced that he would be well taken care of there, and that he would be sure to find his master again. He added that he had sent me a remittance, and that he would call for the dog on his return. I never saw him again, and I have no doubt that he destroyed himself."

Here M. Dermann paused; the expression of countenance with which he had told his story, and the tone of voice in which he had spoken, had interested me deeply. After a few minutes, he continued:

"Bevis remained with us, testifying the utmost gratitude for our kindness. His intelligence and good-humor attracted the strangers who frequented our inn, while the inscription on his collar, and the tale we had to tell of him, failed not to excite their curiosity.

"One morning in autumn, I had been out to take a walk, accompanied by Bevis.—When I returned, I found seated by the fire, in the common-hall, a newly-arrived traveller, who looked around as I entered. As soon as he perceived Bevis, he started and called him. The dog immediately darted toward him with frantic demonstrations of joy. He ran round him, smelling his clothes and uttering the sort of lamentation with which he honored you just now, and finally placing his fore-paws on the traveller's knees began to lick his face.

"Where is your master, Bevis? Where is Sir Arthur?" said the stranger in English.

"The noble dog howled piteously, and lay down at the traveller's feet. Then the latter begged us to explain his presence. I did so; and as he listened, I saw a tear fall on the beautiful head of the greyhound, whom he bent over to caress.

"'Monsieur,' said he, addressing me, 'from what you tell me I venture to hope that Sir Arthur still lives. We have been friends from childhood. About three years since, he married a rich heiress, and this dog was presented to him by her. Bevis was highly cherished for his fidelity, a quality which unhappily was not possessed by his mistress. She left her fond and loving husband and eloped with another man. Sir Arthur sued for a divorce and obtained it; then, having arranged his affairs in England he set out for the continent, followed only by his dog. His friends know not whether he went, but it now appears that he was here last spring. Doubtless, the presence of Bevis, evermore recalling the memory of her who had so cruelly wronged him, must have torn his heart and at length impelled him to destroy the faithful creature. But the shot not having been mortal, the dog, I imagine, when he recovered consciousness, was led by instinct to seek the house where his master had slept last. Now Monsieur, he is yours, and I heartily thank you for the kindness which you have shown him.'

"About ten o'clock the stranger retired to his room, after having caressed Bevis, who escorted him to his door, and then returned to his accustomed place before the fire. My parents and the servants had retired to rest, and I prepared to follow their example, my bed being placed at one end of the common hall. While I was undressing I heard a storm rising in the mountains.—Just then there came a knock at the door, and Bevis began to growl. I asked who was there? A voice replied—'Two travellers, who want a night's lodging.' I opened a small chink of the door to look out, and perceived two ragged men, each leaning on a large club. I did not like their looks, and knowing that several robberies had been committed in the neighborhood, I refused them admission, telling them that in the next village they would readily find shelter. They approached the door, as though they meant to force their way in; but Bevis made his voice heard in so formidable a manner, that they judged it prudent to retire. I bolted the door and went to bed. Bevis, according to his custom, lay down near the threshold, but we neither of us, felt inclined to sleep.

"A quarter of an hour passed, when suddenly, above the wailing of the wind, came the loud shrill cry of a human being in distress. Bevis rushed against the door with a fearful howl; at the same moment came the report of a gun followed by another cry. Two minutes afterward I was on the road, armed with a carbine, and holding a dark lantern in my father and the stranger also armed, accompanied me. As for Bevis, he had darted out of the house, and disappeared.

"We approached the dells which I mentioned before, in the moment when a flash of lightning illuminated the scene. A hundred yards in advance, we saw Bevis grasping a man by the throat. We ran on and the dog had completed his vengeance when I came up. The man, whom I recognised at once as one who had sought admittance at our inn, lay dead, strangled by his powerful jaws. Further on, we discovered another man, whose body exhibited the wounds dog was taking. The stranger approached the dead man, and pronounced him to be one of the murderers of Baden.

Here M. Dermann paused; the expression of countenance with which he had told his story, and the tone of voice in which he had spoken, had interested me deeply. After a few minutes, he continued:

"Bevis remained with us, testifying the utmost gratitude for our kindness. His intelligence and good-humor attracted the strangers who frequented our inn, while the inscription on his collar, and the tale we had to tell of him, failed not to excite their curiosity.

"One morning in autumn, I had been out to take a walk, accompanied by Bevis.—When I returned, I found seated by the fire, in the common-hall, a newly-arrived traveller, who looked around as I entered. As soon as he perceived Bevis, he started and called him. The dog immediately darted toward him with frantic demonstrations of joy. He ran round him, smelling his clothes and uttering the sort of lamentation with which he honored you just now, and finally placing his fore-paws on the traveller's knees began to lick his face.

"Where is your master, Bevis? Where is Sir Arthur?" said the stranger in English.

"The noble dog howled piteously, and lay down at the traveller's feet. Then the latter begged us to explain his presence. I did so; and as he listened, I saw a tear fall on the beautiful head of the greyhound, whom he bent over to caress.

"'Monsieur,' said he, addressing me, 'from what you tell me I venture to hope that Sir Arthur still lives. We have been friends from childhood. About three years since, he married a rich heiress, and this dog was presented to him by her. Bevis was highly cherished for his fidelity, a quality which unhappily was not possessed by his mistress. She left her fond and loving husband and eloped with another man. Sir Arthur sued for a divorce and obtained it; then, having arranged his affairs in England he set out for the continent, followed only by his dog. His friends know not whether he went, but it now appears that he was here last spring. Doubtless, the presence of Bevis, evermore recalling the memory of her who had so cruelly wronged him, must have torn his heart and at length impelled him to destroy the faithful creature. But the shot not having been mortal, the dog, I imagine, when he recovered consciousness, was led by instinct to seek the house where his master had slept last. Canada,
FROM "LITTLE RIVER," AN UNPUBLISHED POEM, by T. S. BOWERMAN.

Our mourings in that conclusion, when the guns
Of England speak her prestige—and our own
To foreign foe, I would not swear!—Me!
Let them forever sneer on near them deaths
Which hostile minions tread but to their graves,—
Forever may that wharf where hostile feet
Of armed foe no'er marshal'd the second day,
Nearer the time comes when Britannia shall Forbid the expectation of a lord
To lord it o'er a million men as good;
Untitled lords are plenty in our woods;
Whose patent, hand, and heart, and arm have signed
In the broad acres feeding half the world.
A nobler fate, a loftier aim in life
Than sword war glory or the mob's applause
Is theirs!—they battle with the trees and win
An empire from the howling wilderness.
No slaughtered armies make their conquests sure,
No tears and blood show Heaven the path
they took;
But toil, and worth, and honest manhood wins
From the old forest's grasp an empire-reign
Might war, but could not make,—an empire wins
A Cæsar might be proud of!
There are lords
That fill high-Heaven's behest of men, and are
Of Nature's nobler line! What's blood or rank,
Or title, if our sires have all been fool,
And we perhaps exalt them only in
A keener zest for manhood?
There are lords
Whose proudest boast their sires were honest men;
Their patent of nobility is worth
That meets harsh, adverse fortune with a smile,
And with a frown thrusts bland temptation back,—
That lifts a virtuous man from poverty
And lifts him nearer to his God; who boast
The desert as a garden blossoming;
Most-crowded ports, cities, and tangled hills.
Thousands of lordly men and manly lords;
Lords that would sample with the proudest lords
If honest manhood's are the points compar'd, Clear thought, stern front, and deeds of charity!
Ours is a favor'd land; on manhood's path
No exhalations of engendered crimes
Cast shadows, and the Nation knows its strength;
Bark's meritless assumptions are not here,
Caste's void distinctions wilt and die upon our shores!

The throne's the heart-stay of our country's weal,
The sceptre borne by our Queen-mother is
The roof-pole of our Council-lodge: 'twas swayed
By an immortal hand when Freedom stood
On Boyne's red shores with party in arms—
Shoulder to shoulder stood,—and Canada
Still stands within its circle staunch and true.

We love our Queen,
A Nation's deep heart-homage give we her,
Our peerage of the people, and the State
Prop'd by love, and ruled by honest men—
Men honest in the light that marks their track,
The light that is the pledge of public faith,
The shield of honor and the patriot's trust,
The Press in freedom, power and wisdom just!
Traitors, with inconsistency, still dash
Their zeal in places 'gainst the public weal;
Unmoved erect that throne stands,—and it shall;—
We love our Queen!

She is a woman.
She feels as love her; woman's heart is true,
Let treason clamour,—but it yield a way
For shaven priests, and turn against before
The flower that Solomon with all his glory
Did not equal.

Hark! a Nation's joy
Roars through the shadows of our forest land
To greet her boy—the stubbins of her hosts
The hope of England's throne! A thousand deep Rend'd round our Prince no servile faith we pledge,—
Clear heads, strong arms in Royal-hearted pride,
Guard the crowned banner—Ours!
We 'want command,
And shall obey her in the boy she bore.
Our trust is God—God strengthen still that trust,—
Wives, mothers, sisters, home—to you we pledge our duty!
What battles fought, what victories must be fought and won.
Ere love will move each heart and truth
each tongue,
And from the dimple throne of the heart be hurl'd
Ambition and its slave—the Dollar god.
Yet down they must come, and not up the
[illegible]
Wrought symbol of the conquering Nationhood—
Scrolled with the politics of Shamelessness and
"To Cæsar Cæsar's—and to God His own."
Proud, stable, [illegible]
[illegible]
Sledging but a clank, and made wondrously hungry a fleeting faith?
What monarchs must be fought, what battles
[illegible]
Ere the Nation and the Principle
[illegible]
My country! Grey country and dear to me!
Let Chaos [illegible] you grow and spread the [illegible]
Love warm each heart, and truth warm every thought,
And every right-arm ring with holy joys.
Patriotism in every school-boy's head be sown,
Life in its limbs, and knowledge on its lodge.
Gird with the girdle that our sires with God,
Right and stronger, hill and temple blest!
Oh, what a glorious future [illegible]

Oh, my country, [illegible] thee on!

QUEENS.

Take a large part of Malta, quit it up with St. Peter's at Germany, add a few of the old houses at Abbeyville, cover it here and there with log houses, roof it all over with tin, pave roads and paths with wooden logs, put an infamous citadel at the top, cover all the streets profusely with dirt, and stick the whole on one of the hills of Milford Haven, with an English Government and a French population, and then you have Quebec. Everything here is in an anomalous state—the foot-paths are ladders, and the roads ditches. There is in [illegible] building, which is not to be used as [illegible] Parliament with which to fill it. There are good squares, which are always empty, and narrow, difficult streets of streets which are always full. With the English the name of Quebec is indissolubly associated with "the Plains of Wolfe. Always [illegible] Wolfe is revered. In a [illegible] point of view, I should say the charm of Quebec are the forts of the garrison, the narrow lanes with the roofs of chalkstone and interlocutory, and you can walk in few places without finding your movements inspected by large open-mouthed guns which bark in embrasure at every corner, behind trees, in gardens, or half concealed by roofs and stacks of chimneys. Of its kind I should say Quebec must be unique, and I am glad to think it is, for it seems to have got old without becoming venerable, and prosperous without either activity or cleanliness. But from the water, as I have said," and before the Prince landed, it looked grand, as all lofty places from the water somehow do.—London Times.

AMUSING LOVE AFFAIR IN LONDON.

A London correspondent of the New Orleans Delta furnishes that paper with the following laughable story:

A good suit in Chancery of a wealthy farmer here, who is very good natured, but inclined to be a trifle fast in his views of life. He had a favorite clerk, a young man about twenty-one, remarkably handsome, modest and highly intellectual. For these qualities he was liked by every one, and the banter did not escape the feeling of good will.—He was as poor as—his salary, and had no connections to push his after fortunes, and so, like the most English clerks, he would ring to a hundred and twenty pounds a year; go on for eight years at ten pound a years rise, and marry when he got to two hundred pounds a year, somewhere to vegetate, and find that the additional ten pounds a year the only kept pace with the additional babe in his household.

The banker, on Sunday afternoon when no one was expected, would occasionally ask the young man to visit his young family at his suburban villa, as the conversation of the young man was an interest and an observer it could not but be of advantage to his children. This kind of intimate, however, but it was a good-hearted error, and we can only wish, all of us, that there were many more constituted. I have not mentioned that there was a beautiful young daughter of the banker's, but that may be always understood in any English family that has known wedded life long enough. But there were, of course, no intentions on the part of the young man, other than entirely delicate, reserved and proper. This will be always the case with English youths as Americans well know. Don't hunt after this. The youth, in spite of two or three day's invitations to the banker's class, to breathe the fresh air and clear his lungs of London smoke, was evidently very ill, and though he declared himself well and robust, the banker shook his head.

"I cannot make out what is the matter with my young clerk," said the banker to a confrere who was in his back office with him after the youth had just brought in some papers.

"Well, you are rather green, I should say, for a man of your time of life and experience," said banker number two. "Don't you know what's the matter? He's in love."

"In love! bah!" He is modesty and propriety itself."

"I tell you it is—true, and with a rich old fellow's daughter, who would no more think of having him for a son-in-law than you would."

"Oh, the haughty old fool! My clerk is as good as his daughter, and be hanged to him! Thank you for the hint."

As soon as banker number two had disappeared, the clerk was called in:

"So, sir, you are in love, and pining away for the object of your affection—that's your secret is it? Why did you not tell me before, sir?"

The youth was silent.

"Well, my boy, I pity you; but I'll give you a bit of advice. If the daughter is like dad's, quick running, a rich fat, [illegible] "offer" and [illegible] and marry her immediately. Then away with the [illegible] [illegible] bolts no doubt. If the old fellow [illegible] it like mad here [illegible] "pitch" him in jail for a short "period."

THE HAMILTON RESOLUTIONS.

Another split in the camp has been the result of the action taken respecting the Orange outrages at Kingston and elsewhere, during the time of the Prince's visit. Mr. Hillyard Cameron has, we believe, carried things with him to Toronto, where he reigns supreme; but in him not found his brethren in other places so ready to bow before, and acknowledge the behests of the golden calf. The Spectator informs us that on Wednesday last what was anticipated would have been a monster meeting of representatives of the Order, came off at Hamilton. The attendance was ridiculously small, notwithstanding the momentous nature of the business to be discussed—the publicity given to the matter, and the anxious desire of Mr. Cameron to display his skill. Only thirty delegates were in attendance, and these met in discussion the whole afternoon. Mr. Ogle R. Gowan moved a series of resolutions, to which, in amendment, M. D'Arcy Boulton submitted a resolution to the effect that the entire Orange body should be bound to support the Ministry at the next election; or, in other words, that the Grand Master should be supported as the head of that new political party, recommended and given birth to by the badly started Orange Herald. The amendment having been put to vote, it was carried by twenty to ten. Mr. Gowan, immediately after the vote was taken, rose and declared his intention of resigning his membership. Other members did the same, and the minority left the Lodge room. What the end of this delightful state of things may be, it is not for us to predict. Clearly, however, what we asserted from the first, is now distinctly apparent. Mr. Cameron, since he was appointed to the Grand Mastership, has been making a tool of the Order to further his own political ends. Ambitious and aspiring, he has some how or other offended, and also the English gentlemen, Mr. Earle—who thus lost his life in saving a sea. On reaching the shore, we were most hospitably received by the poor people, and at once taken to a fisherman's hut, a mere hovel, but to us it was then a palace.—Everything was done to make us comfortable. Seven rescued have come on shore at this place (Cremble) in the past 30 hours, and the few scattered huts about here are all occupied with the crews.

THE STEAM SLAVER "CITY OF NORFOLK."

So much has been said truly and falsely, on this recent slave-state of notoriety, that we give the statement of the crew as the most satisfactory, likely to reach the public:—

STATEMENT OF THE CREW.

The City of Norfolk sailed from the port of Rio de Janeiro on the 5th day of June last, for the purpose as we were informed, of entering the service of the Government of Villaneuva on a transport.

The steamer arrived at St. Thomas, the passage occupying ten days, where we remained six days, and discharged a part of the cargo, consisting of tobacco and provisions of merchantable appearance, the contents of which were unknown to us. While laying at this port we received on board the steamer two hundred tons of coal and eighteen large casks, the contents of which were not known to us at the time.

We sailed thence for Havanna—the passage occupying three days—where we took on a quantity of fresh provisions (the casks) and an quantity (quantity of fresh water for ship's use. Suspicions of voyage were aroused, but again allayed, on account of the nature of our voyage, as a transport, necessarily requiring a larger quantity than a trader.

On the fifth day last of St. Thomas, the engines were ordered below to open their casks above mentioned, and found them to contain rice, beans, &c., besides a number of bags of spices, small tin cups, razors and combs. This circumstance was made the theme of conversation forward; and, after mature deliberation, we went to the Captain in a body, requesting to be informed of his intentions and the destination of the ship upon which he frankly admitted that he was bound to the Coast of Africa for the purpose of procuring a cargo of slaves.

We expressed to him our decided unwillingness to go, and that he should have informed us of that fact while in port. He replied that he wished to hear no more from us, ordering us to go to our work, and threatening to starve us into compliance in case of refusal. We made the Coast in thirty-six days, on Sunday, Aug. 12, and counted seven hundred and seventy slaves; embarked on the same day for a place called San Marino, and on the tenth day cut down-ed the propeller to be out of order, one of the body pins having worked out. We succeeded in repairing damages by means of a cable taken around the propeller, and stood on under canvas only for three-five days, when we removed the cable, and started the engines, which worked up-well on usual, excepting that we feared to reverse them.

On the morning of Oct. 1, we disembarked and landed the negroes on a small bay about eighteen miles from San Marino where the Captain was perspicuous by a fisherman to do so on account of five to three steamers of war who were on the look out for him. After having all the negroes, the Captain, engineers, firemen and some of the sailors took the steamer and started to sea, for the purpose of sinking and boring all vestige of her. They reported the pipe of the fresh water condenser and the delivery valve, secured the wheel in a certain position and abandoned her, steering out to sea under a full head of steam.

At daylight the next morning we hoped the steamer had rounded to and run ashore on the same bay that we had landed on the previous day. The Captain being shrewdly prepared to convey the negroes to the main land in the lighters, and, the plan appearing the most feasible, his proposal was at once carried into effect. We had succeeded in removing 108 negroes when a Spanish sloop-of-war hove in sight, and the Captain and officers fled to parts unknown, leaving us to look out for ourselves. The steamer came to anchor, manned her boats and pulled in for the bay. Our party endeavored to effect their escape in one of our boats, but in consequence of the overloaded state of the boat were overhauled, and together with the remaining negroes, transferred to her Catholic Majesty's steamer Isabel, and carried to Havana, where we quartered until the evening of the 7th October, when we were transferred to the United States steamer Crusader, Lieutenant-Commanding J. N. Maffitt, and conveyed to Key West, Florida, where we were discharged, after receiving all the courtesy and hospitality that could be rendered.

SECTARIAN IMPERTINENCES.

(From the Scottish American Journal.)

We candidly believe that among our sectaries, great and small, there are few evidences of the existence of real religion. When they meet week day or Sabbath day, it is undoubtedly in this name that they assemble—and when they speak, there can be no question but they speak religion; but there lies the lamentable error—they speak and speak only, and emphatically they do speak, but it almost all ends in speaking, and thus it is we find little acting out of what they speak about with such earnestness and apparent caution of demeanour. In Christ, be it noticed, we find a large and populous sect in "eastern part," and one of their opposite ends of wisdom, is that only, the common "inherent," [illegible] which constitutes a renewed nature, and being thus all the rights and consolations of the Church. Thus has to know! This is to make [illegible] religion; it is but of that religion we are taught to search the Scriptures for and find.—The idea of calling it your head calling, is [illegible] in no Christian, and cannot be can by any [illegible] and [illegible] a child of the [illegible] and [illegible] mercy and more with his help they will, is progressively with, that it cannot be be-yond number, how vague, with even ordinary power of common sense, should affect them-selves thus in "Confession" to invocate the simple religion of Him who came down to seek, and to save lost souls. But to fall on the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] mortalities. They said that a christian ought to consist only of good people. As the Orthodox of those times baptised by immersion, the Paterini made no complaint of the mode of Baptism, but they objected vehemently against the baptism of infants." Dr Allix says, that in the middle of the 12th century, they exceedingly increased. See also Reiner.

The Paulicians were not Manichæans. Gibbon in his "Decline and Fall," ch. 54, [which Hallam acknowledged, as far as relates to this matter, to be accurately as well as luminous, and far superior to any work on the subject] says, "the Paulicians sincerely condemned the memory and opinions of the Manichæan sect, and complained of the injuries which have caused that invidious name on them." Where is the candour and fairness of imputing to a class of christians, sentiments and opinions which they solemnly depreciate and deny? It no doubt suited their malignant adversaries who thirsted for their blood to fix that stigma upon them. Jones in his Eccl. H. [vol. 2] proves that the Paulicians of the 7th century, and their successors, the Albigenses of the 12th century, did not, maintain the impious and horrid system of Manichæism. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper they held to be obligatory "for the confirmation of the faithful that is, ought to be restricted to believers. Milner says, they were simply scriptural in the use of the sacraments, they were orthodox in the doctrine of the Trinity, they knew no other mediator than the Lord Jesus Christ."—Ch. His. C. 9, ch. 2. Even Mosheim himself says that "they rejected infant baptism." See also Faber—Waldenses and Albigenses.

It has been fully admitted by all credible historians, that the Albigenses were originally called Puritans, from the Novatian, Paulician, and Paterine dissenters. [Mosh. Milner, Jones, Gibbon]. The constitution of all those dissenting churches left on record, viz., Novatianists, Donatists, Paulicians, with the Albigenses [Dr. Allix's Rem. &c., Ency. Brit. Art. Albig.] was strictly on the terms of "believer's baptism indispensible to church fellowship."

Thus by the facts and testimonies adduced, I have in the estimation of all reasonable persons, furnished a most complete refutation of "V. V.'s assertions respecting, and his charge against, those Baptists of former days, and have demolished the fortress of his redoubtable ally if (not himself under another guise,) "Plantar," a Fisherman. I would fain advise them both to be henceforth "more guarded than to expose themselves recklessly to the charge of putting forth assertions glaringly at variance with the [real] facts established in ecclesiastical history."

If I am not mistaken, "V. V." will find that those whom he regards as "the elect," are not "slain" yet. If neither "the ten persecutions," nor all the tortures of the Inquisition, nor all "the blood hounds" of the sons of sin, nor the fires of Smithfield, proved effectual in slaying them, it is at all likely that he can accomplish that object!

Will you excuse the unavoidable length of this communication.

PHILALETHES.

Nov. 6, 1860.

LATEST from EUROPE.

BY THE "PRINCE ALBERT."

The dates of the Prince Albert are two days later than by the Europa at Halifax. The news is not very important.

The Royal meeting at Warsaw was progressing.

The voting at Naples on the Annexation question commenced on the 21st of Oct. The result had not been definitely ascertained. It was stated that the Neapolitans voted almost unanimously for annexation.

The Duke of Richmond died at London on the 21st October, aged 70 years.

The Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of Austria, and the Prince Regent of Prussia, were all at Warsaw, together with Prince Gortschakoff, Count Rechberg, and other prominent ministers. Nothing transpired as to the Conferences. It is asserted that Russia has positively refused to enter into any engagements with Austria which might lead to war.

The Constitutional announces that the Emperor received autograph letters from the Czar of Russia, explaining the nature of the Warsaw meeting depriving it of any significance hostile to France.

The Gazette de Lyons has been suppressed on account of its incessant appeals for agitation, its attack on the Government, and its disdain of good advice.

The despatches from Naples of the 21st Oct., announce that the vote on the annexation was then being taken. Much enthusiasm existed, immense crowds had poured in, and the voting places were all quiet at the latest dates.

The King of Naples had issued a protest declaring that he would consider the voting null and void.

It was reported that after the annexation was effected, the title of Prince and the rank of General would be offered to Garibaldi.

A Naples despatch of the 21st October says that Garibaldi has officially declared that he would lay down his Dictatorship on the arrival of Victor Emmanuel.

The head of General Cialdini's column encountered and defeated a corps of Neapolitans at San Ioenia. The General commanding the corps, his officers, eight hundred soldiers, and a flag, were taken.

Another despatch says that Cialdini had captured a portion of the Neapolitan artillery.

Victor Emmanuel arrived at Sulerah on the 21st October.

It was reported that provisions were beginning to fail at Gaeta.

It was also reported that the French Minister of Marine had received a despatch announcing that Garibaldi's ships of war had captured a vessel bearing Spanish colors, and another bearing the Austrian flag.

The same authorities continue to assert that the Austrian demonstrations on the Italian frontier were increasing, but on the other hand it was said that Austria had given most positive assurances, which she would not draw the sword unless an attack was made on Rome.

The text of [illegible] Speech which [illegible] to the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, was published; it repudiates the idea of Garibaldi, and Giuseppe Garibaldi, but does not threaten any active hostility on the part of France.

The Austrian official Weiner Zeitung publishes the return numbers for the Emperor. Many sweeping changes in the constitution are proposed. The Legislature seems ready to be consulted immediately with the co-operation of the Provincial Diets.

The Supreme Court of Chancery in consequence of orders from Rome. Cardinal Antonelli has issued a protest declaring that he would consider the voting null and void.

Manchester advices are favourable. The market for goods and yarns was quiet but prices steady.

THE BRITISH GRAIN TRADE.

From the Mark Lane Express.

The fine weather with which the month commenced closed on Tuesday with rain, followed by sharp frost on Thursday. The ten dry days were, however, of immense service to the country, and the bulk of the grain crops, beans excepted, may now be considered as gathered. The fine drying winds recently experienced will place the later gatherings forward in point of condition; but without extraordinary weather for the next fortnight, there is little chance of a dry sample of beans. Ploughing, where practicable, has commenced in earnest, but the sowing of wheat this autumn must be generally backward, the land being foul and wet. Very little change can be noted in the value of old and new wheat during the week, but fine samp new has been long in favor upon a better acquaintance. Very little can be said with old for the same feature of flour. Prices therefore for such qualities have further receded, and have been irregular, partly under the influence of former English advices, and partly from their own accumulation.

The sales noted last week were 71,701 quarters wheat at 56s. 3d., against 124,189 quarters in 1859. The London averages were 56s. 9d. on 3,601 quarters. The arrivals into the principal ports of Great Britain, for the week ending 3rd October, in wheat and flour, were equal to 131,967 quarters wheat, including 9,444 quarters colonial.

From the quarterly imports at London, we find a general large increase in foreign grain and flour—that in wheat and flour alone being equal to a quarterly, increase, of 426,177 quarters wheat; thus, during foreign import for corn and flour into London involving an outlay for the past quarter of about two and a half millions of money, being above double the sum required in the same time last year, the leading imports there being oats.

FROM CHINA.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveller furnishes some interesting particulars respecting the great expedition directed against the Taku forts. The Allies landed at the mouth of the Petang River, about six miles from that of the Peiho, on the 31st of July the Chinese making an opposition. The troops had to march over a mile of flat ground, before reaching the forts. Only one wooden gun was removed, the Chinese having stripped the fortifications to strengthen those on the Peiho. Several informal conferences were dug up, and about 400,000 rounds fell into the hands of the Allies.

The forts are said to have been sufficiently strong to render a formidable resistance after the English and French had taken possession, 20,000 Chinese soldiers were on the scene of conference of ten or twelve miles. On the morning of Aug. 1st, they came sharp firing [illegible] between the combatants. The Chinese having approached too closely during the night. They were driven off with an estimated loss of 160 men, while that of the Allies was but 24. Lord Elgin accompanied the expedition. An attack upon the Peiho forts would shortly be made by land; while the allied gun-boats would bombard them from the river.

ITALIAN AFFAIRS.

From the New York Tribune.

The information brought by the City of Washington, that Garibaldi had called upon Victor Emmanuel for fourteen thousand troops and for the King's own presence at Naples, to insure public quiet, is likely to be the future course of Europe affairs. The policy laid down in the speech read by Cavour to the Sardinian Parliament may be considered as having principles over that of the other party, which obtained a momentary and threatening importance from the non-resistance given to it by Garibaldi.—There can be no attempt upon Rome; but the Pope sustained by French protection, will be left in possession of that city with a certain limited extent of circumjacent territory. Still less will there be any present attempt to snatch Venetia from the grasp of Austria. Steps, it seems certain, will be immediately taken for submitting to the Parliament of the annexed Papal provinces, and also to those of Naples and Sicily, the question of annexation to Sardinia. Count Cavour in the message referred to, was very cautious upon this point. He only declared it essential to the preservation of order that the Provisional Government should be forthwith superseded by a permanent one, elected, and though he declares on the part of Victor Emmanuel, any intention to dispose of the people of Venetia, Italy contrary to their wishes, he yet assumes their wish to be an immediate annexation to Sardinia. He also, distinctly repudiates beforehand any conditional annexation, or anything in the nature of a mere federation. Had Garibaldi proceeded [illegible] Parma [illegible] Lombardy [illegible] Naples independent of assistance from Sardinia, this question of the same, the special [illegible] and the precise nature, of the union of Northern and Southern Italy, might have led to very embarrassing discussion. As matters now stand, Victor Emmanuel seems to be less pacific to dictate his own terms. The battles of Capua and Volturno have proved that the troops of Francis II. will fight, and by compelling Garibaldi to call for the assistance and presence of Victor Emmanuel, have placed him at the head of affairs. In some respects, indeed, it would have been desirable that the people of Naples should have been able to rid themselves of Francis II. and the army without calling upon Sardinia for help. The marching of the Sardinian troops into Naples will be likely to encourage [illegible] pretensions, and Count Cavour may be censured with having directed the [illegible] of non-intervention of Italy [illegible] Emmanuel [illegible] to more prudent [illegible] Emmanuel [illegible] Times in support his movements, on the ground that the duty of that constitution of Italy [illegible] was now apparently on the point of accomplishment.

The [illegible] of the complete solution of the Italian difficulty, by the addition of Venetia, would seem to be held out by the [illegible] Austria. The possession of Venetia is, and must continue to be, a [illegible] bill of expense to the Austrian treasury. All the income that can be obtained from it must fall far short of the necessary expenditure necessary to meet the ever-threatening war which impends and will impend from the side of Italy. Austria, in her present embarrassed pecuniary condition, might be induced for a handsome sum of money to give up Venetia, and, apart from any sympathy for the inhabitants, or any national pride in the complete unity of Italy, the Italians would on economical principles, be justified in a payment which would relieve them from the heavy cost of perpetual armament against Austria.

Died.

At Strathfinnan, suburb of Glasgow, Scotland, on the 9th October, Robert Renfrew, Esq., aged 43 years.

Suddenly, at Keene on Thursday night, 1st November, Philip Carr, Esq., aged 80 years.

We deeply regret to learn from the result of an inquest held, that Mr Carr's death was by his own act, while laboring under partial insanity, induced by long continued and acute bodily suffering, which at times was accompanied by great depression of spirit.

Mr Carr was one of the oldest inhabitants of Otonabee, having settled in that Township, when a wilderness, in 1820.

CHOICE OF A BREED OF CATTLE.

At the last meeting of the Newcastle (England) Club, Mr. Hedley read a paper on cattle from which we make the following extract: "We now arrive at the third part of our subject, namely, what kind of animals to select to be most remunerative to the graziers of the country. In my close inspection of fat cattle for several years I have found the most profitable the best animals have the finest bone, the most capacious chests, and strongest spines. I have therefore, convinced myself I will refuse to go by in the purchase of lean ones, and carefully will one exception I have found these to be applicable. The head of any of our bovine races ought to have the first consideration; that is the true index to the vital structure, and even bodily construction; and will be found to foreshadow all of good or bad that may be accomplished. Then an animal possessed of a broad, full, spacious skull and strong evenly-bent deflective horns will be found to have a thick neck at the base, wide thorax, and strong nervous system; while one with long narrow, contracted skull, and gaunt, abruptly bent horns, will be characterized by weakness, wildness, and shyness to fatten; a small, dull, sunken eye, betokens hardness to touch and inaptitude to fatten; and a bright, large, open, soft eye, vice versa; a starting, dark, fiery eye often accompanies a small forehead and hereditary wildness, and when combined with small drooping horns, and a chin with no loose skin hanging from it, is a very despicable animal indeed, weak in constitution, predisposed to lung disease, and sterile in fattening propensities. Animals with weakly-formed lungs, have always small appetites, often narrow chambers, and small loins, and the width of these parts will always be found in an exact ratio with the strength of the head. The nose, instead of being long and fine, as Youatt, Armstrong, and several other naturalists recommend it, ought to be in my opinion, thick, strong and as near the ear as possible, if only in proportion to the size of the frame. Thickness of nose and thickness of chest are often twins, and so are thin, meagre, irregular noses and consumption. Small, pipy noses oft sniff the air into frames of small capacities, and are jerked to snorts that can stop but forv small morsels at a time. These observations I have found to be applicable to any of the kinds of cattle shown at Newcastle market, but besides the shape of the animal, the age and flesh must have especial consideration, and be adapted according to food and situation; otherwise, the realization of remunerative profits will be uncertain. In warm shelty valleys, abounding with fish, flies, succulent herbage, I do not think there is any class of animals whatever can equal the short-horns for growing and making pay, and most assuredly not only for turnips in fold in winter. I would choose for grass in spring heifers or steers quite fitted up with lean flesh, and not those two-and-a-half or three years old; and for turnips in winter, the same class of animals as regards freshness, but from three or four years old, or otherwise, large sticks possessing all their calf life; such sticks are decidedly preferable to small slender two-year olds for turnips, and do infinitely better for the grazier on the same amount of food.—For seven-eighths of the summer pasture of England, however, the Shorthorns are found to be too good, and when judiciously alloyed with the Irish and Galloways, the produce has been found for several years to supersede the Shorthorns in their purity.—The half Irish breed smooth the half Galloways on altitudes dry and arid, and the latter the former in marshes low and humid.—The Irish on in the truest type of the old breed, the strips along the back not having yet disappeared. The Galloways are the hardiest race known, and the only one that appears quite invulnerable to lung diseases, and when well crossed with soft-backed Shorthorns are better for turnips than the half Irish, and nearly equal to the Shorthorns themselves; but the half Irish as a body quite excel the half Galloways for grass, being often of more suitable ages, and hence easier fattened.

FATTENING TURKEYS.

The manner in which we fatten turkeys here is to place them in a dark pen, furnished with a roost, and keep them stuffed with corn meal dough, without giving them water; in nine days they are fit for market. Turkey raising is not as a general result very profitable, they are so liable to disease when young, and very troublesome to the farmer from their strong propensities for ranging.

PRESERVATION OF CUT FLOWERS.

A French Provincial paper states that cut flowers may be kept fresh for a long time by the introduction of a spoonful of powdered charcoal into the water contained in the vessel in which they are placed.—Neither the charcoal nor the water requires renewal, the latter remaining limpid.

KEEPING RATS FROM GRANARIES.

Some granaries in this section—where plenty of rats do congregate—are built upon round posts, the posts covered with smooth sheet zinc or tin, to prevent the rats climbing up, and punished with moveable steps.

ALBION HOTEL, MONTREAL.

E. W. BROOKE, Proprietor.

PLEASANTLY situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become in great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive business, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements not convenient to the travelling public. The beds in the bed-rooms have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, as say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

PICKLING VINEGAR,

TO-MORROW.

Don't tell me of to-morrow—
There is much to do to-day,
That can never be accomplished,
If we throw the time away!
Every moment has its duty—
Who the future can reveal?
Then why put off till to-morrow,
What to-day can do as well?

A new play was recently produced at the principal theatre of Vienna, which illustrates the notions of Bystanders which obtain currency and credence among the Germans. The scene is laid at St Petersburgh; the real hero is a little mongrel, known to his fanciers as a Scotch terrier; but the nominal chief character is a banker from Glasgow, named Sutherland. He had failed in his native place, but in Russia he had become a great man, for he was the favorite money-dealer of the Empress Catherine.

We all know the strength of a Scotch constitution, but we also know the severity of a Saint Petersburgh winter: yet Mr. Sutherland appears beneath to his audience, amidst the frozen scenery of that ice-bound city, in what is believed abroad to be the regular everyday costume of a citizen of Glasgow; namely, a kilt, jack-boots, and a cocked hat, with a small grove of funeral feathers. Mr. Sutherland, despite his county nother costume, appears to be in excellent health and spirits. He has thriven so well in the world that, in accordance with a tolerably correct estimate of the Caledonian national character, his relations at home begin to pay court to him, and to send him presents. One indulges him with the hero of the piece: the small, ugly, irate, woolly quadruped before mentioned. The banker takes it with a good-humored "Pish!" little dreaming of the important part the little wretch is destined to play. He had scarcely received the gift when the Empress passes by, sees the dog, and desires to possess it, while the greatest Sutherland in only too glad to be able to gratify a royal caprice at so light a cost.

She, in the fervency of her gratitude, named the dog after the donor—a great compliment.

Alas! one day, the dog, who had eaten too plentifully of zoobreese (chicken stewed with truffles,) was seized with apoplexy and died; though not without suspicion of having been poisoned by the prime minister, a piece of whose leg he had disputed the day before. The Empress sighed for more over the loss of her dog, than she would have done for that of the minister. The one might have been easily replaced; she knew at least twenty waiting open-mouthed for the vacancy. But who could replace her four-footed friend!—she mourns him as a loss utterly irreparable. She orders the greatest mark of affectionate respect it is possible to show to be performed on the dead terrier.

The scene changes: it is night. The fortunate banker is seated at dessert, after an excellent dinner of "mutton roshd," and "hot-a-mant pour-ridges, and potatys," indispensable to a North Britain; his legs are crossed, his feet rest upon a mahogany fender, which he takes care to inform us he has received from England, as he sits sipping his "sherri port binn," and colloquizing pleasantly over the various chances of his life.—He is just about to finish his evening with some "ayes," the English name for the pleasant, invention of Admiral Gregram; his servant enters, to announce that the chief executioner with a file of soldiers have just dropped in, to say a word on a matter of business from the Empress.

The awful functionary, on stalking into the room, exclaimed, "I am come—"

"Well, I see you are," replied the banker, trying to be facetious, but feeling like a man with a sudden attack of ague.

"By command of the Empress!"

"Long may she live!" ejaculates Sutherland, heartily.

"It is really a very delicate affair," says the executioner; who, like the French Sansom, is a humane man; "and I do not know how to break it to you."

"Oh, pray, don't hesitate. What would you like to take?" asked the banker, spilling the grog he tried to hand to the horrid functionary, from sheer fright.

The Envoy shakes his head gravely. "It is what we must all come to some day," he adds, after a short pause.

"What is? In Heaven's name do not keep me longer in suspense!" cries the banker, his very tones breaking together with agonizing rapidity.

"I have been sent," answers the awful messenger; again he stops—looks compassionately at his destined victim.

"Well!"

"By the Empress—"

"I hope!"

"To have—"

"What, sir!"

"Strangled!" said the Executioner mournfully.

The banker shrieked.

"Strangled!" repeats the man, hesitatingly, pointing to a bird in a golden cage, to prevent there being any mistake in Sutherland's mind as to the nature of the operation he is to be called upon to undergo.

The Executioner now lays his hand affectionately on poor Sutherland's collar, and looks him in the face, as if in inquiry if he had any particular or peculiar fancy as to the mode in which he would like to go through the preparatory operation of being killed.

"I have brought the cheese," he says, "and rum sometimes are advised. The Empress she not wait; and we have not got many minutes for the glass eyes yet."

The banker hears the very notion of being strangled; but Sutherland, in every emergency, was always ready for any sharp thing, and the banker had grown strong enough in throwing off the notion of a desire, if He could, to show fight. He accordingly, with a sudden and extraordinary effort of force, to keep up appearances, "struck out from the shoulder;" but the Executioner, used to the practice, parried the blow, and quietly, for the short space that remained to him, put himself in a position of defence.

I don't mind giving you half an hour if you can satisfy these gentlemen—and be (quick) to his execution.

It is briefly done. The banker plays like a man whose life depends on his dexterity—we suppose several millings—for the Executor remarks that he can not forget that a groom in England frequently receives several thousands sterling a year; there's very great action often among the Frankish and Teutonic potions of the Continent. We once heard a Spanish general agent, in a large assembly, that the usual pay of an English cringe was five hundred pounds a month, on him (laughter) the bold Scot some Iberian dramatist; and therefore a public functionary like the executor might be remunerated proportionably higher. The enormous pecuniary sacrifice gets for Sutherland some half-hour's respite; which he wisely uses by flying to the British ambassador, Sir Elfinick, and awaits the result with great anguish.

Sir Elfinick goes to the Empress. He asks if her Majesty be aware of the position of a British subject named Sutherland?

"Excellent man," says her Majesty, "No! what is it?"

Sir Elfinick bows low at the tones of the Imperial voice, and now begins to explain himself with something more than diplomatic haste; thinking, perhaps, that already the fatal straw may be filling the banker's chambers.

Imperial Catherine does not, of course, consider the putting to death of a mere Scotch banker, and making him in reality what some of his brethren are sometimes called figuratively—a man of straw—worth this fuss; and sets the ambassador down in her mind as a person of wild republican ideas, who ought to be recalled as soon as possible by his government, and placed under proper surveillance; but, nevertheless, she causes some inquiries to be made, and learns that it is in consequence of her having ordered of "Sutherland" to be stuffed that he is probably thus undergoing that operation.

Sir Elfinick expresses such horror and consternation at this intelligence that the Empress believes his mind to be disordered.

"What possible consequence can the accidental stuffing of a Scotch banker be to you, miler?" she saith.

"The ac-ci-dent-al stuff-ing of a Scotcher Bankers!" in a German idiom not generally used by our nobility, grasps Sir Elfinick, mechanically, with pale lips and bristling hair.

"Take him away! He is mad!" screams the Empress, thinking that no sane person could be concerned about such a trifling affair, and in another moment the most sacred of international laws would have been violated (as the stage,) and Great Britain insulted by profane hands being laid on the person of her ambassador, when all at once a light breaks over the mind of Her Majesty—the rumbling of something forgotten. She exclaims, with a Russian remembrance quite cheering to behold, "Oh, I remember; now it is easily explained.—My poor little dog (I had forgotten him (so) died yesterday, and I wished his body to be preserved. Chile chien!—His name was the same as that of the banker, I think. Alas! that cruel Death should take any dog!"

"But Mr. Sutherland has, perhaps already been murdered!" gasps the ambassador. "I pray that your Majesty will lose no time in having him released should he be still alive!"

"Ah, true! I never thought of that," returns the Empress.

The order is finally issued, and Sutherland rescued, just as the Executioner, grown angry at his unreasonable remonstrances, resolves to delay no longer in executing the Imperial commands. To put the coup-de-grace on the comic agony of the poor banker, his innocent red crop of hair has, in that half hour of frightful uncertainty, turned as white as snow!

A HERO.

John B. Gough, the celebrated temperance lecturer, who has returned to the United States, from a visit to his native England, relates in one of his recent speeches, the following anecdote: John Maynard was well known in the Lake districts as a God-fearing, honest, intelligent pilot. He was a pilot on a steamer from Detroit to Buffalo this summer afternoon. At that time these steamers seldom carried boats. Smoke was seen ascending from below, and the Captain called out, "Stevens go down and see what that smoke is." Stevens came up with his face as pale as ashes, and said—"Captain, the ship is on fire!" Then "Fire! fire! fire! on starboard!" All hands were called up. Buckets of water were dashed to the fire, but in vain. There was a large quantities of rosin and tar on board, and it was useless to attempt to save the ship; passengers rushed forward and implored of the pilot, "How far are we from Buffalo?" "Seven miles." "How long before we reach it?" "Three quarters of an hour, at our present rate of steam." "Is there any danger?" "Danger here—see the smoke hurrying by! go forward, if you would save your lives!" Passengers and crew, male and female, children, crowded the forward part of the ship. John Maynard stood at the helm. The flames burst forth in a blast of fire; objects of anxiety [illegible] the Captain cried out through his trumpet—"John Maynard!" "Ayc, aye, sir." "How does the land?" "Close by you, sir." "Head her more out and you lose the shore." Now, sooner, yet nearer she approached the shore. Again the captain cried out, "John Maynard!" The response came feebly, "aye, aye, sir. "Can you hold on five minutes longer, John P—" "By God's help I can!" The old man's left arm scorched from the cords; one hand shrivelled, his face upon the steamboat, and his teeth set, while his other hand upon the wheel, he stood firm as a rock. "Hold on, John Maynard!" "Aye, aye, sir!" The old man's voice was heard through the smoke and flame, and the banker had gone through the agonizing suspense of a desire, if He could, to show fight. He accordingly, with a sudden and extraordinary effort of force, to keep up appearances, "struck out from the shoulder;" but the Executioner, used to the practice, parried the blow, and quietly, for the short space that remained to him, put himself in a position of defence.

THE BRAVE BOY.

A CAPITAL STORY.

I shall never forget a lesson which I received from quite a young lad at the Admiralty in B. Among my schoolfellows were Hartley and Jemson. They were somewhat older than myself, and to Jemson I looked up, as a sort of leader in gustoes of mischief as well as of sport. He was not at heart rudicuous; but he had a foolish affectation of being thought witty, and he made himself feared by the bad habit of turning things into "ridicule," and being ever on the look out for matter of derision.

Hartley was a mere scholar, and little was known of him among the boys. One morning, as we were on the way to school, he was seen driving along the road towards a neighboring field. A group of boys, on my whom was Jemson, met him as he was passing. The opportunity was one not to be lost by Jemson. "Hallo!" he exclaimed, "what's the price of milk? I say, Jonathan what do you fodder on? What will you take for all the gold on her horns! Boys, if you want to see latest Paris style, look at those boots!"

Hartley, waving his hand to us with a pleasant smile, and driving the cow to the field, took down the bars of a mid-fence, saw her safely in the inclosure, and then putting up the bars, came and entered the school with the rest of us. After school, in the afternoon, he let out the cow and drove her off, none of us knew where. And every day for weeks he went through the same task.

The boys of B. Academy were nearly all the sons of wealthy parents, and some of them, among whom was Jemson, were dunces enough to look down with a sort of disdain upon a scholar who had to drive a cow. The sneers upon Jemson were accordingly often renewed. He once, on a plea that he did not like the odor of the barn refused to sit next to Hartley. Occasionally he would inquire after the cow's health, pronouncing the word "ke-ow," after the manner of some country people.

With admirable good nature did Hartley bear all these attempts to wound and annoy him. I do not remember that he was once betrayed into a look or word of angry retaliation. (Good!)

"I suppose, Hartley," said Jemson one day, "your duty means to make a milkman of you?"

"Why not?" asked Hartley.

"O nothing; only don't leave much water in the cans after you rinse them—that's all?"

The boys laughed, and Hartley, not in the least disconcerted, replied, "Never fear; if ever I should rise to be a milkman, I'll always give good milk and good measure too."

The day after this conversation there was a public examination, at which a number of ladies and gentlemen from the neighboring towns were present. Prizes were awarded by the principal of our academy, and both Hartley and Jemson received a creditable number; for, in respect to scholarship, these two were about equal. After the ceremony of distribution, the principal remarked that there was one prize, consisting of a gold medal, which was rarely awarded, not so much out of account of its great cost, as because the instances were rare which rendered its bestowal proper. It was the prize of heroism. The last boy who received one, was young Manners, who three years ago, rescued a blind girl from drowning. The principal then said that, with permission of the company, he would relate a short story.

"Not long since, some scholars were flying a kite in the street just as a poor boy on horseback rode on his way to the mill. The horse took fright and threw the boy, injuring him so badly that he was carried home, and confined for many weeks to bed. Of the scholars who had unintentionally caused the disaster, some followed to learn the fate of the wounded boy. There was one scholar, however, who had witnessed the accident from a distance, who not only went to make inquiries, but stayed to render his services.

"The scholar soon learned that the wounded boy was the grandson of a poor widow, whose sole support consisted in selling the milk of a cow of which she was the owner. Alas! what could she now do? She was old and lame, and her grandson, on whom she depended to drive the cow to pasture, was on his back helpless.

"Never mind, good woman," said the scholar, "I can drive your cow!"

"With blessing and thanks the old woman accepted his offer. But his kindness did not stop here. "I have money that my mother gave me to buy a pair of boots with, but I can do without them for a while."

"One," said the old woman, "I cannot consent to that, but here is a pair of heavy boots that I bought for Henry, who can't wear them. If you would only buy those, giving us what they cost, we could get along nicely."

"The scholar bought the boots cheap as they were, and has worn them up to this time."

"Well, then, it was discovered by the other boys of the academy that our scholar was in the habit of driving a cow, he was assailed every day with laughter and ridicule. His associates became particularly severe on the matter of cash. But he kept on cheerfully and bravely, day after day, never minding their observations, driving the widow's cow and tending his little charge, attending to the thought that he was doing right in so doing, and for all the jeers and sneers that assailed his ears. He never condescended to explain why he drove a cow, for he was not ashamed to make a visit of it to the cheerless cottage, and furthermore it is but right to say that he was as quickly with the other pride that could look down with ridicule on any useful employment. It was by upon occasions that his fellows who practically discouraged by his industry.

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, I appeal to you, was there not true heroism in this boy's conduct? Nay, Master Hartley, do not hide one of your schoolfellows behind yourself! You are not afraid of ridicule, you must not be afraid of praise. Come forth, come forth, Master Edward James Hartley, and let us see your honest face!"

As Hartley, with blushing cheeks, made his appearance, what a round of applause, in which the whole company joined, spoke the general approbation of his conduct! The ladies fixed upon him their most approving looks and waved their handkerchiefs. The old man wiped the gathering moisture from the corners of their eyes, and clapped their hands. Those clumsy hands of Hartley's that seemed peculiar ornaments that it never was all have been on his head. The medal was bestowed upon him amid general acclamation.

Let me tell you a good thing of Jemson before I conclude. He was heartily ashamed of his ill-natured raillery, and after we were dismissed, he went with tears of sorry self-rebuke in his eyes, and tendered his hand to Hartley, making a handsome apology for his past ill-manners. "Think no more of it, old fellow," said Hartley, "let us all go and have a ramble in the woods before we break up for the vacation." The boys, one and all, followed Jemson's example, and then we set forth with hearts into the woods. What a happy day it was!

Boys and girls, never despise another who may be more plainly clad than yourselves. There is many a noble heart under a well-patched garment. Whenever you are tempted to look scornfully upon one in a poor or plain dress, think of Edward James Hartley, the brave boy and his gold medal.

WEALTH vs. MISERY.

Towards the latter end of last century, Adam Smith wrote "An Enquiry into the causes of the Wealth of Nations." In this work he showed how wealth was created by certain causes, and distributed in certain proportions among all. The title of the work, and the nature of the enquiry has done a vast deal of harm. Smith did not intend it. But it is a fact that the thinking men of the last century have occupied all their time and thinking how national wealth is to be accumulated in the greatest quantities, entirely forgetting a more important thing than national wealth, viz., national happiness. National wealth has been created, and in greater abundance in Britain than in any other country in the world. Heaps of cotton goods, and cloths of all descriptions, ship loads of cutlery and iron work of every kind are brought into existence every day. Britain is covered with cotton mills and manufactories, day and night producing wealth, and the millions have been turned into machines in order to produce the wealth. But with all this, do we have the means of real happiness? Verily not. The magic of producing wealth has dragged into its train, the women of the country, young and old, and even children. Look at many of Britain's factories, are their inmates happy? National wealth is worse than useless if national happiness be not along with it. Let us get hold of a clear idea of the word national happiness. It means the happiness enjoyed by the great mass of a nation, counting not by chance—not as if the whole nation consisted of the men having a vote for an M. P., and as if the rest were inferior animals—but counting by souls. If the great mass are not happy but miserable, then it is a falsehood to call that nation happy. Think of upon living under a government for the purpose merely of being forced into a worse state as regards food, clothing and exercise, than they were in a state of savage nature. Christianity was not intended to produce such a state. Depend upon it there is something very far wrong; and remember this, that a ill cannot undergo forever.

Maltbus and some other political economists have promulgated the doctrine that the poor must give up marrying, or else in such an overstocked country as Britain, misery will increase. Their doctrine is false. I do not say that the very young should marry; but I do say that we should in this far advanced century, be in that state of society that men and women of maturity of mind and body, should all be enabled to enter into the married state with a full certainty of being able to support themselves and families comfortably and happily. The man of the Bright and Roebuck school of politics aim at producing this state of society, and with God's help they shall produce it.

What then is individual happiness? It is the being able to gratify with its proper food, physical and mental, the faculties of your mind and body. You have a stomach. It requires a certain amount of daily food. You have limbs. They require a certain amount of daily exercise. You have moral faculties. They too must have a food amount of daily exercise. You have social faculties. They must be exercised too.—You have religious feelings, and they must not be forgotten. When combined learn to gratify each faculty in its proper degree, and under the control of the higher feelings they will not only enjoy happiness at the time, but lay the foundations of a happiness which will continue and which will ensure the future peace of mind of themselves, and above all of their children. The day is fast approaching, when the glorious motto "The Gods to him that sow sow shall," will be written over the House of Legislature; the seats of justice; the high places of the land and the chairs of schools and colleges—the day when a man shall be elevated into place not because he is in favor with or liked that, but because he has a county qualification or any qualification at all, other than this, that he is of moderate mobility. It is not national glory for to have millions of slaves beneath your sway, neither is it personal glory to be the proud ruler of the waves; but it is national glory to be a citizen in a land where the millions with well developed and exercised minds and bodies and good moral feelings are busily engaged in rendering themselves and their children daily greater subjects of praise and glory while others support God has clad in majesty upon the back for the use of all his creatures.

SINGULAR TRADITION.

Among the Esquimaux Indians there is a singular tradition regarding the winter year's origin and supervision. They say that when the Great Spirit made the earth, he also made three men, all of whom were the most gluttonous; that one of them, the first he had to his supply of a bountiful harvest and bright shooting star would watch. This individual chose for his portion the summer season, and he had perfect [illegible] came up copper-colored; the third did not keep in till the water became black with mud, and he consequent was, its sun color.—Then the Great Spirit laid before them their packages of bark and bade them choose, and out of pity for his misfortune to either, gave the third man his first choice. He took a load of each of the packages and having felt the weight, chose the heaviest; this copper-colored one then pleased the second individual, leaving the white and the lightest. When the packages were opened, the first one found to combine spades, bows, and all the implements of labor; the second contained hunting, fishing and warlike apparatus; the third gave to the white man pens, ink and paper—the staples of the white—the means of mental improvement—the social link of humanity—the foundation of the white man's superiority.

FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY.

Faith! What unwonted confidence lie hidden in that little word. A shield for the unprotected—strength for the feeble, and joy to the sorrowful and grief-stricken. Let thy craving and cheering influence descend upon every soul.

Hope! Thou best a theme in every heaven, a chorus in every heart; what crush the joys of earth without thy cheering light. Beneath thy brilliant beams bright as the rays of morning stars, the clouds flit away from the towering brow. Who could dwell upon the cold waters of life's desert did not thy beams gather to direct him! When sorrow ploughs up the heart with deep furrows, and the ties of life are snatched away by one, thy white-robed countenance speaks peace to all that are within. Let thy heavenly plane of celestial glory shine on the mutilated splendor till every darkened path be lighted by its cheering rays.

Charity! Greatest of all—the crowning queen among virtues—the brightest handmaid of religion and love. May thy empire never want feeble, or thy heart grow cold. Let us mark the splendor of thy presence by every [illegible] and by every [illegible] act. It is to shine thy [illegible] over the ignorant, the erring and the guilty. Let thy influence soften every obdurate heart, and reclaim every vicious mind.

AN ARAB SERMON.

Eddys-Effendi ascended his pulpit to preach, and addressing his hearers said:—"O believers! know ye what I am going to talk to you about?" They replied that they did not. "Well, then," replied he "since you do not know, do you suppose that I am going to tell you?" Another morning he again appealed to the pulpit and said; "O believers! know ye not what I am going to tell you?" They replied that they did. "If you know it then," said he, "I need not tell it to you;" and he descended from the pulpit and went his way. His auditors, puzzled at what to do, at length agreed that, if he again made his appearance, some of them would say that they knew, others that they did not. And again Eddys-Effendi mounted into the pulpit and said, "O Mussulmans! know ye what I am going to say to you?" To which some replied "We know;" others said "we know not." "Good!" returned he; "let those who know tell those who do not."

TAR AND PLASTER AS DISINFECTANTS.

The Comptes Rendus describes a distinguishing application by M. M. Come and Demeur. This application, which is a powder, is made by [illegible] tar in the proportion of one part tar with one hundred parts of plaster. It is applied by sprinkling it over the evaporating vessel in the form of powder, or else the powder is made into ointment by rubbing it with oil, or other way, but particularly as powder, the discharge is destroyed, and at the same time absorbed, the tar ensuring to be the chief agent in the first part of the process. In one of the experiments at La Charite under M. Velpeau, a gangrenous wound, discharging profusely, immediately ceased to be offensive under the first application of the powder. There appears every reason to believe that the operation in question will be of much use in various sanitary as well as surgical matters.

...ployed from each of the two Houses, Count ... to proceed to ... Sardinia to ... Sardinia, and if necessary to visit his ships. Under these circumstances, Admiral Persano will take no part in the approaching siege of Gaeta. The Daily News denounces this as a direct intervention by France, and says that Europe must not, by silence, appear to provide a shield to the evil designs and to fill those repeated surprises.

Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi, whose forces were combined, were preparing for battle.

An engagement took place on the 26th of October half way between Turno and Teano, between the Piedmontese and the Neapolitans. After a conflict of two hours the latter fled, leaving a great many prisoners.

The London Morning Advertiser asserts, on authority of an official despatch, that Victor Emanuel was immediately to bombard Gaeta by sea and land.

Capua had been definitely occupied by Garibaldi's troops.

The official returns of voting on annexation was—yes, 1,500,000; nays, 9,971.

It was reported that King Victor Emanuel would confer on Garibaldi the title of Prince Caraboni, with an annuity of 30,000 livres, and would decorate him with the order of Annunciation.

Gen. Lamoricière had been wounded a Roman cuirie, and medal struck in his honor.

FRANCE.

The Emperor on the 31st reviewed 20,000 men near Paris, 10 evening, and all the proceedings of a regular campaign were rehearsed.

The Bourse on the 31st ult. was firm. Rentes advanced ¼, closing at 69f. 25c.

ITALY.

Naples, 27th Oct.

A Sardinian flotilla commanded the republic near Gaeta. The French Admiral despatched a frigate to stop the firing. Admiral Persano retired and returned to Naples, expressing his regret at the conduct of the French, but said nothing as to Victor Emmanuel's visit to Naples. He denied Austria informed the European cabinets of an intention to send her ultimatum to Turin; on the contrary, he had reiterated her assurances of a purely defensive policy.

Count Richberg had given an explanation to the diplomatic corps relative to the Warsaw interview.

Austria put the three following questions to Russia:

Will your Government recognize facts which have been or may be accomplished in Italy?

Should Austria be attacked by Sardinia, and the latter to be supported by another Power, Power, what would be their attitude?

If the event of another war and fighting transferred to German territory what would Prussia do?

Answers were not given, but Rechberg re-stated that Austria was about to issue a circular note to its representatives abroad giving them the results.

The German journals are unanimous in pronouncing the Warsaw Conference a failure.

The Berlin National Gazette says not the slightest counter demonstration was made at Warsaw to the French programme.

SPAIN.

Marshal O'Donnell, in the Cortes, on the 29th ultimo said that Spain had resolved to remain neutral in the affairs of Italy. He also protested against the doubts expressed of the loyalty of Napoleon towards the Spanish Government.

CHINA.

The steamer Canadian, which was conveying overdue China mails, met with an accident to her shaft.

LATEST.

The Paris Presse asserts that the Sovereigns at Warsaw were united in promising assistance if attacked by Piedmont.

SPAIN.

Marshal O'Donnell had announced in the Senate that Count Rome would proceed to Rome on a mission, but that Spain resolved to observe strict neutrality in the affairs of Italy.

CHINA.

The Northern forts were captured after three hours fighting. Others surrendered. The allies lost four hundred killed and wounded. They occupied Tientsin. The Ambassadors were there and would have proceed to Pekin with cavalry. An escort of rebels were withdrawn from Shanghai. The amount of gold withdrawn from the Bank was $30,000.

Chief telegrams received yesterday via Trieste state that early submission was expected.

The Times is still without any comment on the French intervention at Gaeta, and the Paris journals have not yet adverted to the subject. The Times considers that unless some unforeseen event changes the fortunes of war, a few days must suffice to drive the Bourbon sovereign from Gaeta.

Halifax, Nov. 13.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Sir William Dennison is gazetted Governor of Victoria.

The Daily News publishes the text of the despatch from Lord John Russell to the British Minister at Turin, dated October 27. Lord John says the great question which appear to the British Government to be of issue are these: Were the people of Italy justified in asking the assistance of the King of Sardinia to release them from the Government with which they were discontented?—and was the King of Sardinia justified in furnishing assistance with his army? His Lordship says Her Majesty's Government no doubt feel justified in declaring that the people of Southern Italy had not good reasons for throwing off their allegiance, and cannot, therefore, blame the King of Sardinia. The despatch closed as follows:—"Her Majesty's Government will turn their eyes rather to the great flying prospect of the people building up the edifice of their liberties and consolidating the work of their independence amid the sympathies and good wishes of Europe and France."

It was believed in Paris that the object of France in preventing the blockade of Gaeta by sea, is merely to facilitate the escape of the King of Naples.

The French Journals offer no explanation.

ITALY.

According to the Neapolitan accounts, Caldini was beaten by the Neapolitans with great loss at the Garigliano, some despatches placing his loss as high as two thousand, killed and wounded, and five guns. Official despatches from Turin say those assertions are completely false, and that the Sardinians were not defeated at all.

Capua was attacked on the 1st, and capitulated on the following day.

The Naples correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs as follows:—

Naples, Friday.—Capua capitulated today, and the troops leave with the honours of war, but lay down their arms at the Lata di Napoli of Capua. To-morrow they come to Naples. Naples is all illuminated, and there are great rejoicings.

An attack on Gaeta is shortly expected.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

PUNCH AND THE PRINCE.

The last picture in the last Punch is called "The Next Dance" and represents Mademoiselle Columbia in full dress toilette Punch and the Prince of Wales. Punch is introducing the young people, and says:—"Now, my boy! There's your pretty cousin Columbia—you don't get such a partner as that every day!" The Punch also publishes the following:—

THE NEXT DANCE.

Yes, dance with him, Lady, and bright as they are,
Believe on he's worthy those sunshiny smiles,
Wave o'er him the flag of the Stripe and the Star,
And gladden the heart of the Queen of the Isles.

We thank you for all that have welcomed him—most
For the sign of true love that you bear the Old Land;
Proud Heiress of all that his ancestor lost,
You restore it in giving that warm, loving hand.

And we'll claim, too, the omen. Fate's looking askance,
And Fate, only, knows the next tune she will play,
But if John and his cousin join hands in the Dance—
Bad luck to the parties who get in their way.

Escape of Queen Mary from Lochleven Castle

BY AGNES STRICKLAND.

The escape of Mary Queen of Scots, from Lochleven Castle, is one of the most striking passages of female royalty. The time, the place, the beauty and exalted rank of the illustrious heroine, her wrongs and her distress, the peril of the enterprise, and its success, combine all the elements of a romance. Yet the adventure creates a more powerful impression related in the graphic simplicity of truth, as it really befell, than when worked up with imaginary circumstances into a tale of fiction, even by the pen of Scott in the pages of "The Abbot."

The fatal concatenation of events, which had the effect of entangling the royal victim in the toils of her guileful foes, can not be developed here. The broad outline of the outward and visible facts is familiar to almost every reader, but to expose the undercurrent of view by documentary evidences, and to make manifest the hidden workings of iniquity, requires a wider field than these brief pages can afford. I must, therefore, refer the public to my long-promised "Life of Mary Stuart," which will shortly appear in my new series of royal female biographies, based on documentary sources, for particulars which can scarcely fail of removing the obloquy with which mercenary writers, the ready tools of self-interested calumniators, have endeavored to blacken the name of this hapless lady.

The confederate lords into whose hands Mary, confiding in their solemn promises to treat her with all honor and reverence as their sovereign, rashly surrendered herself, at Carberry-hill, not only shamelessly violated their pact, but after exposing her to the most cruel insults from the very abjects of the people, incarcerated her in the gloomy fortress of Lochleven, under the jailorship of the mother of her illegitimate brother, the Earl of Murray, and the wardenship of the sons that person had had by her late husband, Sir Robert Douglas, of Lochleven, for the Lady of Lochleven was a married woman when the Earl of Murray was born.

It is scarcely possible to imagine a more doleful abiding place for the fallen Queen in her affliction, than that which had been thus injuriously and by a refinement of malice, selected for her by her perfidious foes. The castle, which is of extreme antiquity, and indeed is here been founded by Congal, a Pictish king, is of rude architecture, consisting of a square donjon keep, flanked with turrets, and encompassed with a rampart; it is built on a small island, almost in the centre of the wild expanse of the deep, and oft-times stormy, waters of the loch, which is fifteen miles in circumference. The castle island consists of five acres, now overgrown with trees and brushwood. In the midst of this desolation tradition points out one ancient stem, of fantastic growth, said to have been planted by the royal captive a memorial of her compulsory residence in the castle. The bough of this tree which is called "Queen Mary's Thorn," are constantly broken and carried away as relics by the visitors, whom the interest attached to the memory of that unhappy princess attracts to the spot, which her sufferings have rendered an historic site of melancholy celebrity.

The events of the long dreary months which Mary were away in this ware-encircled prison-house, bereft of regal state, deprived of exercise and recreation, and secluded from every friend except her two faithful ladies, and a little maiden of ten years old, the voluntary companion of her durance as well as the occupations wherewith she endeavored to beguile her sorrowful hours, will be found very fully detailed in my biography of that unfortunate queen, with many recently-discovered facts.

Towards the end of March, George Douglas, the youngest son of the Lady of Lochleven, whose manly heart had been touched with generous sympathy for an royal queen, with a deep and enduring passion for the fair ill-fated sovereign, made a bold and almost successful attempt to convey her out of the castle in the disguise of a handmaid. The queen, however, being identified by the whiteness and delicacy of her hands, which she had ceased to expose one of the rude boatmen, who endeavored, to remove her head and shoulder to grip a sight of her face, she soon brought back, and George Douglas immediately after, while each grasping a pistol, kept the rest at bay. In another moment they were in the boat, the bonds were cut, and the sail hoisted, and the fugitives were soon out of reach of their foes. Their course was directed to the opposite shore of Kinross-shire, where Lord Seton, with a gallant band of his followers, awaited their arrival, and received the queen with the deepest reverence, as their lawful sovereign.

Meantime, Lord Seton, and the noblest gentlemen, who were zealously co-operating in her cause, were eagerly expecting the progress of the night and the signal of success from the tower. The moment of the arrival of the fugitives at the water-gate was announced by the firing of a gun from the battlements, and the ringing of the castle bell, which was instantly answered by the joyful shouts of the assembled multitude. Then the whole host of the queen's friends, with colors flying, and trumpets sounding, marched in order of battle to the water-gate, and received their royal mistress with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of loyalty and devotion. Mary, who had been previously mounted on a fleet horse, immediately rode off at full speed, followed by her whole train, to Seton House, where she was received with the utmost magnificence by the lord of the mansion, and his lady, the beautiful Flemish countess, Sandilands, who had been the companion of the queen's youth, and was her most attached friend.

Mary, however, was not allowed to remain long in repose after the fatigues and hardships she had encountered in the service of her royal mistress, adding to his loyal and proudest epitaph, "that he had assisted in delivering that illustrious princess from her doleful prison in the Loch Leguine." (Lochleven)

Poetry is the handmaid as well as the inspiration of chivalry, and if ever the deeds of brave and loyal gentlemen deserved to live in song, surely the achievement of the loyal associates who rescued their oppressed queen from her cruel captivity in Lochleven Castle, ought to be thus commemorated, and their names had in remembrance long after "the marble that enshrines their mortal remains has perished, and its imagery mouldered away.

THE TWO PROCESSIONS.

How often in life we find opposites side by side. The holy man and the hypocrite kneel at the same altar; beauty and deformity pursue the same route; the millionaire and the rag-picker jostle each other; joy and sorrow mingle everywhere. Most vividly was I impressed by this peculiar phase of life, at the recent visit of the Prince of Wales to Mount Auburn.—Crowds were gathered to catch a glimpse of the favored youth, upon whose greatness was thrust at his very birth; the pride of a long line of kings; the hope and pride of a great nation, and heir to its crowns ps youth in whose suite titled personages of his own land, noble men of ours, and urges of both countries followed, pleased to do him honor as an appreciation of his mother's worth; glad to bestow upon him the attentions due to the representative of a great people, of a liberal government, and of our mother country.

On the wide level road from the College to the Cemetery, the horses which bore the Prince made a trial of their speed in a race with fast teams driven by "fast boys."—The contest, in which "Young America" was left behind, afforded Albert Edward a bit of genuine enjoyment, and brought the carriage, as also a few others of the party which were able to make as good time, to the gateway some in advance of those who rode in "slow coaches." In the meantime the black vehicle of the dead, with its mournful procession, arrived, and, dividing the other party, entered the gateway as if forming a part of the Royal cortege. The Prince's barouche, and those that immediately followed, passed up to the Chapel, while the funeral train turned into a side avenue, and wound around to where the dead was to be laid. The rear carriages of the other party followed the mourners to the burial spot, instead of the Prince to the Chapel, and His Highness thus on his way lost before the cortege was aware of it.

While within the Cemetery, how widely different were the two scenes transpiring at the same time. In one place stood that Royal youth, with feet passed on the threshold of manhood, his young blood aglow with the excitement of his age, and his ears ringing; his heart, upon which care or real sorrow never yet pressed, leaping with life's brightest hope; now near the close of his journey through the Provinces and States, amid a storm of the grandest ovations; and even within these sacred shades followed by crowds anxious to look upon Victoria's boy; petted and honored everywhere. Thus was a type of life's bright side.

In another part of the grounds was a band of bruised hearts, bending their head upon the marble cushed over breath of that mysterious jewel, the soul; in tearful sorrow realizing how slight and uncertain is the tenure of this life's enjoyments; still in thoughts of God's immediate love, before which the mightiest possessions of earth must bow; starting to feel—"Thy will be done," even when, by the laws of love, the heart strings are breaking. This was a type of the sad side of life.

While the Royal youth emitted in planting two trees, to perpetuate the memory of his visit to this "garden of graves," these mourners consigned the form of their loved one to its narrow bed, in this seed-field of God. The trees may grow and flourish to gladden our sight; the embankment and will live again to bless "Our Father's" presence. In a brief period, at the longest the Prince, or it may be the King in worldly rank, must pay the debt of nature, and pass on to a kingdom where no one wears a crown, but on his death on earth shall meet. While we wish for him the happiness and the success he gives promise to merit, let these little graves be entrances to the mortal city—may he so use duty ordained, and so his pressence has been among our-like, his end on earth deserve a glorious entrance in heaven.

BENCHER ON RIDE MEN.

In the course of his first Sabbath morning sermon, Henry Ward Beecher pitched right pat into the members of the Circle Christian Endeavor Society, and, among other things which they ought to avoid to perfection, like unto angels of heaven, he spoke of "riding men." Now, we don't know exactly what he means by "riding men," but we suppose he means those who ride on horseback, or in a gig, or a sleigh, or a carriage, or a wheelbarrow, or anything of that kind. Well, we don't see any harm in riding men, provided they are not overloaded, or ridden with a whip, or spurred, or anything of that kind. Some men are born to be ridden, and some are born to ride. Some men are born to be horses, and some are born to be jockeys. Some men are born to be donkeys, and some are born to be donkey engines. IRISH VALOUR AND ENGLISH FOLLY.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

We are surprised that any bitter feeling should be aroused in Ireland by a recent article in the Times covering the Pope's Irish Brigade of cowardice. The bravery of Irishmen is so well known, that any attempt to insult them on that point is out of the question. An Irishman may wince if we even use his countrymen of want of business habits, of improvidence for commerce, of trust of that "curling common sense" which deepens paltry pecuniary outlines; but every military student in every army in Europe knows of Irish bravery as a matter of course—in the same way as he learns to distinguish the old valour of the Spanish infantry, the furia of Frenchmen, the stubbornness of the Highlander, the German intelligence in out-post duties, Swiss fidelity, and Russian readiness even in retreat. A flippant article, founded on an erroneous telegram, as ours already this question than it would any other question of history. The Pope, his Priests, and "the Irish" are topics on which Englishmen like to be "heated to the top of their bent." The least witty member of Punch will call it a contain a cut of the Pope in some ludicrous position; and any article in any journal attacking the Irish has an old flavour that recommends. On this subject "those who pepper the highest are sure to please."—But our Irish friends would make a great mistake if they thought that the mass of readers here are misled by such outpourings. A Times writer on the old familiar topic is read as the laughed at just as the stage Irishman is still funny, the Irishmen with such measures could not be found in the farthest wilds of Connaught. But the Englishmen who enjoy the jokes have amongst their friends Irishmen with whom they relish the enjoyment—friends whose glory regard to all hatreds and purposes as Englishmen, and whom they never think of as aliens or strangers in the land. The existence of the little cliques of ascendancy cabbers in Dublin is certainly a disgrace to Ireland, just as the literature of old and the Holywell-street literature of to-day—a kind of literature entirely unknown, by-the-bye, in Ireland—is a disgrace to England. It suits the purpose of letter writers to speak as if this class represented Irish opinion; for if they spoke of it as the smallest minority in the world—which it really is (an intellectual party, in fact, like the Urquhartites in England)—their readers might retort, "Then why detest it so frightfully?"—a query that would cut short a supply of topics extremely very handy in the season. As to the Irish Brigade in the Roman States, we cannot sympathize with the name for which they fought; but there is not the least doubt that they fought with the utmost ante-the purest courage of the race. The terms of capitulation dictated by the Piedmontese General who commanded the attack, and who has no interest in giving praise to the "foreign hands"—no taxpayer in Italy to-day—speaks of them in honourable terms as "brave men." But, as we have said, this or any other testimony is scarcely needed. For the last two centuries Irishmen have been shamefaces in the wars of Europe with a courage and a hardihood amounting to ruthlessness. The literature of all those and countries, from Shakespeare to Schiller, testifies to it. Shakespeare's Irishman—the only Irishman he draws—is generally contrasted with Fluellen, the valiant and disputatious Welshman. Captain Macmorris (Henry V., Act III., Scene 3) has all the valour of the race, and something who so like a friend and worshipper of rumbo—an Irish quality another to this day, of the commissioners of the Irish press to take on its own. We need, however, no poet's pages to remind us of Irish valour. French history tells us of their prowess at Fontenoy. English history records what the 87th and the Connaught Rangers exhibited in the Peninsula; and the "Inniskillens" vindicated their old glory on the battle of Waterloo. In fact, there is perhaps hardly a doubt that properly commanded, the Irish can make the best soldiers in Europe. Their very faults, as well as their good qualities, combine for good in the campaign or in the battle-field. Their gaiety keeps men, cheered many a dull moment, and lightened many a long march. Their individual daredevilry has made them able to shift for themselves where the more cooly English neither fish nor fatten. The recklessness which takes little thought for the morrow may be a sin in the civilian, but it enables the Irish soldier to face death as lightly as he would a cricket-ball; and his waste of habits of calculation makes him to omit to count the odds against which he fights. It is much to be regretted that the old policy of England—dictated by a foolish bigotry on the side of the Church—tended to "crush into subordination" a whole nation of soldiers almost ready made to our hands, and lovingly loyal to a fault, as their fidelity to the worst of the Stewarts proved. Even to this day the old vice, English distrust of the Irish Papist—as utterly thought not entirely—on the grounds of the sovereign. The few regiments thoroughly manned by Irishmen have an distinctive sentiment outbreak, and freedom on matters of recognizing from their Regal colonels.—During the Crimean war, when a proposal was made for a regiment of Irish Guards, to wear the shamrock with Donegal-street, and "dress" and the other day, because a few only were had rioted in the north, all other Irishmen were denied the privilege of becoming volunteers. English rulers seem to forget that the Irish are a Celtic nation—governed by sentiment and feeling, as much as by reason of public law. Were the Queen to visit Ireland every year it would do more to make the union with England ardently loved than one hundred substantial benefits. Were a regiment of Irish Guards with Prince Arthur (Patrick) as honorary colonel, added to the army, we should have possibly, the finest regiment in the British army (the Tipperary militia indeed not excepted). When Irishmen went to fight for the Pope they were drawn by a natural attachment for the head of their religion; and their nationality was honored by an Irish banner, and by an uniform with an Irish facing. It may seem "humiliating" to regard these things—but Irishmen are not English Saxons at all. They do not understand that Irishmen are more reverence than orthodoxy, and that a shrewd on the Monarch of Hanover in the old Jacobite days—more than a majority of the Irish there, as English politicians—did not scruple to make English the popular theme the policy of the party subsequently and very like Lord Clarendon. THE STEPNEY MURDER.

On the 29th ult., Mullins was convicted at the Old Bailey, London, when he received sentence of death.

The murder for which he is to die was in the highest degree sublimated and cruel; but even the guilt of this is, perhaps, surpassed by that which he meditated when he laid his plot for the ruin of Emm. To commit a crime and then to pocket the reward offered for the discovery by falsely denouncing another man, is a refinement of villany which almost horrifies us.

The story is, indeed, one of the most extraordinary that has ever been told in a court of justice. The murdered parent, Mary Emsley, was a widow, about 70 years of age, of very miserly habits. She lived entirely alone, in the neighborhood of Mile-end, not only performing all domestic duties herself, but going out to collect her rents, for she possessed considerable property in houses. Henry Mullins she went on this errand, and would bring home some £20, £30, or £50. She was last seen alive about 7 o'clock on the the evening of Monday, the 16th of August. On the evening of Friday, the 17th, a man named Emm, who had been occasionally employed by the deceased, communicated with a Mr. Faith, who had married a daughter of the deceased, and the result was that the house was entered, and Mrs. Emsley was found murdered in a lumber room. £ 's reward was offered, first of £100, then of £300, and on the 8th of September a communication was made to the police by [illegible] named Mullins, the subsequent accused. He denounced Emm as the murderer, and said that he had been cricketing Emm's cottage, and had seen him go into a brick-field and hide a parcel, which, sure enough, contained property of the deceased. The parcel was tied round with a dirty apron-string. There was an enclosure bound with waxed card. The property consisted of spoons and other articles, together with a check for £10, drawn by a firm who were tenants of Mrs. Emsley, and paid by them to her on the very day she was murdered. Whoever, then, possessed this check and put it into the parcel, may be fairly looked upon as the murderer. The whole gist of the case for the prosecution was to show that not Emm, but Mullins himself, made up the parcel and hid it in spot whither he afterwards conducted the police.

The evidence, though entirely circumstantial, comes from many different quarters, and the combined effect is to leave no doubt that Mullins, and not one else, had possession of the deceased's property, and used it to insure the ruin of Emm. It was proved beyond a doubt that Emm went to Stratford on the night of the murder, that he was in company with more than one person up to midnight, and that then he went home to bed. It was also proved that on the day when he was alleged to have hidden the parcel—namely, the 8th of September, four weeks after the murder, he was not out of his cottage till 10 o'clock, Mullins having stated that he saw him in the brickyard between 8 and 9. Emm, therefore, being proved innocent and Mullins' evidence shown to be false, we have very strong grounds for transferring our suspicions to the latter. A number of circumstances came sometime to prove into certainty. Mullins was seen about the place where the parcel was found. On the Friday, the day before he made the charge, he was seen at the brick-field. He had been seen on the evening of the murder at about eight o'clock in the neighborhood of the deceased's house. The witness Raymond positively identified him, and another person saw him passing through Stanley-green.

There are, however, much stronger pieces of evidence. On the unsuspicious of Mullins's lodgings was found a piece of string exactly similar to that which bound up the parcel, and there was also [illegible] was used for the cord which had tied the enclosure. It was suggested that Mullins, knowing that Emm was a shoemaker, used waxed cord in order to give color to the story that Emm had hidden the parcel. A pencil case belonging to the deceased was disposed of by the prisoner's wife shortly after the murder. Mullins was by trade a plasterer, and the hammer he used exactly fitted the wounds which deprived Mrs. Emsley of life. In the clotted blood was the mark of a nailed boot, and such a boot Mullins had thrown into a deathbeds some time after the fatal day.

The case reveals to us one of the most effective means which Providence uses for the detection of crime. It would seem that in nearly every the guilty cannot rest, but is impelled by an irresistible force to talk of his crime, and to do something to avert the suspicion which he fancies is about to fall on him. That Mullins wanted to get the £300 is certain enough; but there is also little doubt that he was urged on by an uncontrollable desire to give publicity to the event of the deed with the sacrifice of Emm to satisfy [illegible] revenge. So that as it is, the [illegible] which he had not for a gallows they sought his own foot; his wicked machinations recoiled on his own head, and he now, after a long-drawn trial, the [illegible] impartiality of which the [illegible] Mullins confessed, been found justly guilty of the atrocious crime.

HUNTER THE MURDERER.

The unfortunate young boy has confessed that the murder of Dunbar was premeditated. He says that a week previous to the murder, he had made up his mind to deprive the county of life, and that it was for the purpose of carrying out the bloody determination that the visit to Charlestown Lake was made. At the time Hunter shot Dunbar, the latter was in the boat with his back towards the shore, the former being on shore, but only a few yards distant. The shot entered the back of the head under the brain, passed through and made its way out at the eye. Dunbar fell backward from his seat in the boat, and exclaimed, "Oh, I am shot, how were you so careless with the gun?" Hunter then pretended that the shot was accidental, and went into the boat to wait the result. After a few minutes, Dunbar was able to sit up, and Hunter, believing he would not better, got a rifle, and while Dunbar lay with his back over the boat to prevent the blood from the wound to drop into the water, struck him on the head with the butt, with the strength of the blow breaking Dunbar into the water. While the body was in the water the blows were continued till life was extinct.

Having thus said a good deal that is in the way of his crime, and having succeeded in [illegible] the public mind, Hunter went to the house of Dunbar, and informed the family that Dunbar had been drowned. He then went to the [illegible] and informed them of the sad occurrence. [illegible] Hunter began to feel the position in which he is placed, and attempts more to his religious duties.—Belleville Recorder.

THE MAYORALTY.

It is with the deepest regret that we know the gentleman who has so well filled the office of Mayor the year is in a state of health that precludes the possibility of his continuance in office. The time is close upon us when the rate-payers will require to choose a gentleman to fill the responsible position for the coming term. The Town in its present state of affairs needs the services of a man of no ordinary abilities to superintend and navigate through its difficulties. A man who can sustain the dignity of the position, and who is unsurrounded by the many biasses and local vexations so derogatory to the Town's best interests is called for. Who is the coming man? We will leave rate-payers who have the good of the Town at heart to move in the matter, and remind them that there is no time to be lost.

THE GOVERNOR GENERALSHIP

The London papers have been discussing the subject of our next Governor General for some time past, and the Daily News, a Ministerial paper of note in the Metropolis, intimates that a report is current that it is proposed to appoint the present Governor of Nova Scotia as Governor General of Canada, and adds that the rumor of the appointment is "more generally believed in Canada than even in London." That is a piece of intelligence which is new to us, and we hesitate not to say that it is false. It appears that the rumor has originated from the fact of Lord Mulgrave being with the Royal party in their tour through Canada, but we do not remember of hearing or seeing any mention before of his name in connection with the appointment of Governor of Canada. There has been a rumor of Sir Fenwick Williams the present administrator of Provincial affairs being the successor of Sir Edmund Head, but no one appeared seriously to believe that he would be appointed. There is also a difference of opinion as to whether we require a successor just now. Some believe that Sir Edmund will yet return and put in the term of his re-appointment—others that he will remain where he is—except of the peerage in store for him, and so leave us with a grace which he could not under other circumstances.

Of the former is the Leader who says "we have yet to learn that Sir Edmund Head will not return and serve out the term for which he was re-appointed," while the Globe thinks the present opportunity of Sir Edmund's visit to England only too good an opportunity for him to escape the storm of indignation ready to burst upon him from an injured people in Canada, ever to think of a return here. Time will disclose as to who is in the right. We incline to the belief that Sir Edmund will not come back, and for several reasons we do not desire his return. Like all our Governors he has been maligned, and often blamed, unjustly, but his connection with the "double shuffle," his complicity in that bare-faced act of treachery and corruption, has branded him as a party man, and wanting in moral courage to maintain a principle. His conduct towards the two days Ministry, while justified by partizans, can never be looked on by impartial and thinking men otherwise than as arbitrary and unyielding, and stamps him equally unfit to administer the Government of this Province with acceptance.

It has been heretofore too much the case that in appointing a Governor for Canada more attention has been paid to select an individual for the office to whom the Government had given a promise of promotion than to one really fit for so important a place. We have been cursed too long with useless and bad Governors—the time has come when we must have an independent man, to have a mind of his own, but not so independent as to disregard the wishes of the people over whom he rules. The subject of an elective Governor has been mooted in our Legislative Halls, and elapsed upon it if England does not send us a first-rate man as to administrative ability, honesty and fidelity to execute and carry out the "well understood wishes of the people" irrespective of party, we shall soon take the matter in our hands, and appoint one ourselves.

Notwithstanding the rumor circulated by the Daily News of the appointment of Lord Mulgrave as governor we can have other and positive information on the subject [illegible] Any change [illegible] in which has been announced in the proper place.

[illegible] from any other authorities, the [illegible] of appointment as governor of Canada [illegible] British North America, and Governor in Chief of the Dominion of Canada. Nova Scotia [illegible] of him "appointment [illegible] Mulgrave at his own votes his appointment to the government of Canada ought not to be thought of by the Duke of Newcastle. . . . . Canada requires a superior person in every respect to preside for the next five years over its destinies."

One of the benefits we calculate upon resulting from the late visit of the Royal party amongst us is that from ocular demonstration and auricular information the Imperial Government through its proper officer will be put in possession of more correct knowledge of our standing wants and wishes and being in possession of these, it will be enabled thereby to meet our wishes and accede to our requirements by sending us the very best men at their disposal as our Governors. We cannot, we will not, put up any longer with missies or automatons like some of our former Governors who invariably fall into the arms of the Family Compact—or partizans and subscapegoats who set the country in rebellion by their court acts of treachery and eavesdropping. Neither do we want poor Governors who come out chiefly to repair their shattered fortunes as heretofore; so let us hope that His Grace the Duke of Newcastle has taken home with him such ideas of our position and requirements, as not only to influence the Government in selecting and appointing good Governors for us, but that in transmitting his despatches to those Governors they may bear evidence that he has kept both his eyes and his ears open while travelling in our midst.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

A Toronto correspondent of the Montreal Herald writes that a great discovery has been made by a Mr. Clemo, Chemist, of that city. Our readers are no doubt aware that attempts have been made at different times to manufacture paper from straw of a texture sufficiently fine for newspaper printing. That degree of quality could not be attained in the absence of a chemical necessary to reduce the straw to a pulp. The proprietor of the London Times some years ago offered a reward of £10,000 for such an agent, but all attempts at discovery were unsuccessful. It is with joy that we now hear of the discovery having been made, and that by an humble citizen of a Canadian city. The correspondent says: So astounding was the discovery, so ponderous were the results that would follow to the world and to himself, that I suppose the young man could hardly persuade himself that he had really succeeded, and no doubt had to pinch himself to find out whether he was not dreaming. But if he had difficulty to convince himself of his good fortune, how much more must he experience in convincing others of the practicability of his invention. Indeed this was the trouble he had to encounter, and for a year and a half he laboured hard to convince certain manufacturers of the feasibility of the plan, but to no effect. He however demonstrated to himself the certainty of success, as well as to one or two others deeply interested in the discovery, and among them to that energetic gentleman, Mr. George Brown. As soon as success was definitely ascertained an arrangement was made between the inventor—whose name, by the way, I should state is Mr. Clemo—and Mr. Brown, by which the latter became possessed of a large share in the invent on, and took immediate steps to have it patented. To tell how this was accomplished, not only in Canada but in the United States, England and France, would be to tell a long story of how the circumlocution of the patent offices of these countries was for once conquered, and how red-tape barriers, which retard the progress of many a worthy man, were pushed aside by our energetic friend. In the course of a few weeks at any rate a patent was obtained, and the inventor and his partner protected in the possession of their valuable discovery. The largest manufacturer in this section of the Province was soon convinced of its utility and had one of his mills altered to make paper out of straw, and since then several issues of the Daily Globe have been printed on the product. So far, then, there appears to be no doubt of the success of the undertaking, and you will see its importance to Mr. Brown when I inform you that the saving in his own establishment will be upwards of $20,000 per year. A larger field was however open to him, and he proceeded to New York, from which city he has just returned, having made an arrangement, it is said, with a number of capitalists—the chief of whom is Cyrus W. Field, of Atlantic Telegraph celebrity, who is a large paper manufacturer—by which Messrs. Brown and Clemo are to receive some $800,000, or thereabout! I am sure your readers will rejoice at this good fortune to Mr. Brown. The past three years of commercial disaster have had no more serious effect upon any branch of business than that of newspaper enterprise, and the establishment of the Globe has not been kept upon its full vigor, without strenuous effort. But, thank fortune, there is a prospect of relief, and the gibes and jeers of political bivalvings as to business [illegible] will be effectually silenced.

Mr. T. J. Fisher writes from Golden Gate, K. T., dating Oct. 6, to his brother Mr. A. J. Fisher of this Town, that he has gathered with quicksilver [illegible] worth $30.50. Some of the quartz has turned out $16,500 per cord, and has since been dug out in four days by one man. Miners give $12 per day for teaming, and $6 a day and board for a man. The prices of supplies are high: hay $400 per ton, flour $20 per cwt. but falling, potatoes 10c. per lb, turnips 5c, beets 15c; beans 20 cents per lb. We raise nothing within fifty miles of the Diggings, and there is no one trying for it is too cold a country. All is busy, quiet, and down, and the place is rickety, especially in the mountains. There has been over a hundred persons hung here for murder and stealing; the last each was on Friday when a man named Gardner was hung. ITALY AND MAZZINI.

We do not feel disposed almost at any time to take our opinions from the leading presses of the world, as they are termed, nor from their correspondents in the pay and interest of those whose whole histories denote them the enemies of advancing humanity. "Read and hear all sides, and then make your own conclusions," is a wise advice and especially so is it necessary while we consider the character of some patriotic men in times of trouble, trial, and struggle, such as now exist in rising Italy. Noble, glorious Italy! But where now would her name, nobility, and glory have been, had not her heart been dauntless and fired by patriots like Mazzini, true to himself, his people, and his native land? In the darkest hour of Italy's oppression, when trodden to the very dust by the iron heel of despotism, this man still nursed his hopes, still labored for his country, and strove with ceaseless energy to inspire her sons with aspirations like his own, for Italy, her independence, nationality, and liberty. Ceaselessly he worked—though not he only; and the result of all this work, hope, and love, is now the almost certain enfranchisement of his native land. And yet we can find souls so sordid as to raise suspicion on his name, and by incessant falsehood and misrepresentations try to dim his honest reputation. But he is not alone in this; only a few weeks ago, when Garibaldi seemed to prying eyes in a critical position, the Lounds of slander were even baying and barking at his back, anxious as it were to make manifest and produce confusion in the ranks of patriotism. The leading presses of the world charged at him with falsehood, in the vain attempt to crush the man, and thereby crush the hopes of Italy. First they strove to blast the fame of his fellow-patriot and life-long friend, Mazzini; and when they dreamed that this was nearly accomplished, then through Mazzini's injured reputation were the poisoned arrows aimed that were to wound to death the last, best hope of liberty, her glorious Garibaldi. But thank Heaven, all this failed, and he and liberty are kindlier than ever to succeed.

But when we think of this thirty years' exile of Mazzini, wandering about the world and dreaming of his land, we cannot resist the indignation rising in our soul as we witness all the mean and miserable attacks that have been made upon him by the willing slaves of prejudice and royal pay. Look at him in the long time past in London, gathering the children of his native soil, rearing, feeding, and educating all, even while he lived by hard and laborious toil himself,—telling the poor organ boys of their country and her past glory, and filling their young hearts with patriotic hopes to yet help her, and yet spend their lives to bring her back the liberty she is now winning. Yet such is the man the tongues of slander has assailed, and such is the spur the huge ingratitude of some few Italians would denounce as I discover from his own loved Italy forever. No wonder patriots will sometimes sink, and lose all hopes for mankind, when we see such exhibitions as this before us.—And after all, what is the sum and substance of all that has been said against this genuine nobleman of nature? Sum it up, and it all resolves itself into the phrase—"he is impracticable!" Such has ever been the character of struggling men; and only when success is theirs, and never till then, is the charge of impracticability separated from their works and name. And thus we find Mazzini's is no solitary exception in the history and experience of patriotism. Fifty years ago in Britain do we find the men who followed "free speech and liberty of conscience" denounced as the vermin of "impracticables;" and yet it is to those very men, democratic, improved, humanized, Young England has her people chiefly indebted for possessing, with America, the freest speech and greatest latitude of opinion among all the different nations of the earth. So it is, we find, the world over. The impracticable of yesterday is the successful helper of humanity to-day. The dreamer of years ago has lived to see the realization of his dreams, whether in government, science, poetry, legislation, or liberty. And therefore the cave scream of "impracticability" found in the lips of truth and Heaven by nations, spurned, and vile, is but futile in the end, and is only used to supply the lash of argument when not a word can be uttered in defence.

On this day, while we exult in the white Atlantic's breast and watch the gorgeous sunset bringing on from afar the dear intelligence for which her heart's pulse is throbbing every hour, we think of the poor Italian exile, and of every lip Garibaldi has kissed, and heart he has warmed and joined at; and yet, but for that impracticable one-third man, the poor mechanic Symington, the georgeous steamer coming up the Bay might still be little better than a dream, and we have but the old storm-stayed packet to depend on, whether for news, trade, merchandise or communication with the dear old land, and the dear ones left there behind us. Nash, too, has been the "impracticability" of the tireless patriot Mazzini—impracticable, because he still had hope while others sank down in indolence and despair. While they betook themselves to serve themselves, he was still so impracticable as to work for Italy; while they were selfish he was generous; and while they quailed before obstacles and yielded to opposition, never so did he, and never so did Garibaldi—they mounted over obstacles and bore down opposition. Such are ever the van workers of the world, such are ever impracticable in the eyes of selfish, calculating wretches, who make merchandise of patriotism and power; but it is to such we and the world owe all that is good, wise, great, and god-like on the earth; they are in the hands and arms of Providence; and oh, how fallingly ungrateful is to hear such men abused, maligned, destroyed, because they will work out their own purpose and the purpose of Heaven, even though they should fail, rather than turn the servers, and sell the the birthright of themselves and fellow-men for a silver dish of pottage.

With Garibaldi's, will be linked for ever the honored name and fame of his compatriot and firm adviser, Mazzini; both have succeeded so far, and neither will rest, we may depend, until success crowns all their full desires, or death end their earthly career. Had Garibaldi failed even in one field, he would have been as "impracticable" as his friend; and we can believe that those who now attempt to traduce the one would have been but too willing and too ready to so use the other, had opportunity permitted. But when kings and counts have gone to dark oblivion, these patriots will live enshrined in history—nothing brighter about their fame than this same impracticability, that persevered, worked, and waited and worked, till the liberty of Italy was gained. Impracticability in this is but unyielding, strong-souled perseverance.—Scottish American.

NEW INVENTION.

A hand-loom weaver at Dunfermline, named Charles Lawson, has completed the invention of a machine for weaving Brussels and velvet-pile carpets and table-covers which is likely to cause a revolution in these branches of manufacture. The peculiarity of the machine is, that it can be applied to any plain cloth web, raising the weft to any length, and in case of velvet piles, cutting the loop in process of weaving. By the process any variety of colors can be introduced without waste of material, the pattern being formed entirely of the weft, which, instead of being shot across the whole breadth of the web, is inserted only where shown in the pattern—then a dozen different colors can be woven as economically as one. The process is described, therefore, as producing cloth quicker than by any of the old machines. The inventor has taken several years to bring his invention to a practical issue, one great difficulty having been the fixing of the weft, so that it will not pull after the pile is cut, in which he has now completely succeeded.

A TERRIBLE MISTAKE.

A strange affair is reported in the Hungarian journals:—A carter was a few days ago charged to convey from Grosswardein to Klausenberg, among other things, several bottles, of which he was directed to take special care. Thinking that they contained excellent liquor, after going some distance he opened one and gave some of the contents to half a dozen peasants, reserving a glass for himself. Two of the peasants immediately fell asleep and their plumbering was ascribed to the excellence of the liquor and he offered more to other persons, they, however also fell asleep, and he himself became seriously indisposed. Before long the first two peasants died, and it turned out that what they had taken was chloroform. The carter, in dismay, hastened home, but he was so ill that his life is despaired of.

JUST LIKE HIM.

When Oliver Cromwell once went into a Catholic Church he saw twelve statues of massive silver. What are these? he asked of his attendants. The trembling priest replied: My Lord, they are the statues of the Twelve Apostles. Take them down, said Cromwell, and turn them into coins that, like their master, they may go about doing good. Much money that is hoarded up does less good than when turned into statues of the Apostles.

The Ottawa Union states that double the quantity of lumber produced last season is now ready for the market, "in face of the fact that the home market is stopped already." Caution is advised.

Mr. Albert Savage, of Quebec, while out shooting at Carillon, accidentally brought the hammer of his fowling piece into contact with the gunwale of the boat. The charge passed into the unfortunate gentleman's arm.

The Brockville Recorder says:—The Hon. George Brown's expositions of the corruptions of the ministry are most tumultuously listened to by the thousands who attend the demonstrations got up in his honor. We have had many inquiries as to the probability of getting the Hon. gentleman to address the people in this quarter are at Farmersville. The Hon. John A. and his friends are striving hard to turn the current but with as little power as the old lady, who tried to stop the tidal flow with her broom.

Agricultural.

HINTS ON GREEN MANURING.

A Lincolnshire writes to know what crop he could afford a good title for the cows in April, and also how to turn in for wheat in the Fall? It is somewhat difficult to pasture a crop, and plough it under at the same time. One can not very well eat his cake and keep it too. Rye furnishes good feed earlier than almost any other crop. But if one expects to make manure of it by ploughing it to grow until in blossom, it is ploughed under. If fed through May and June, the growth it can be small, and not much benefit will arise from ploughing it under. The better way is husbandry is to do one thing at a time, and to do it thoroughly. If the land needs manure, and is so far from the barn that fertilizers can not be carted economically, it is brought into good heart by turning in green crops. When this is done, we should make a business of it, and turn in two crops in a season, or one crop of full growth.

We may sow Fall rye on the corn stubble, as I proposed by our correspondent, turn it in, the last of June or the first of July, and sow buckwheat immediately, which will be fit to turn in the last of Aug. Or we may sow clover in the same way, and follow with buckwheat. This will give two full crops, and restore a very large amount of vegetable matter to the soil.—This rotation which our correspondent mentions, viz: corn, oats, wheat, and grass, would be improved by one year in potatoes or some other root crop. In a farming district so near a good market as Bucks county, Pa., we doubt very much whether green manure is economical. There ought to be a steady and remunerative demand for animal products—beef, pork, mutton, veal, lamb, butter, cheese, eggs, poultry, etc., and every vegetable product should be consumed upon the farm, and large quantities of manure be manufactured to keep the land in a highly productive state.—Where there is a good market for animal products, it is much better economy to manure with animal fertilizers than with vegetable. If, while the ground is in corn and in roots, it is manured with fifty or more loads (half cords) of good manure, it will bear a crop of wheat, and two or three crops of grass without manure.

The best roots for feeding are carrots, beets, mangle wurtzel, and turnips, one, or all of them, according to the circumstances of the farmer and the kind of stock kept. Those who rear stock with hay and grain, make large quantities of manure and keep the land in good heart.

USE THE WINNOWING MILL THOROUGHLY.

It will pay to clean grain thoroughly before offering it for sale. A careless or dishonest man has little reason to congratulate himself upon having sold a quantity of chaff, cockle seed, and other foul stuff, for the price of wheat. Dealers in grain have sharp eyes for anything that affects the market price, and they readily detect wilful or careless neglect to properly clean the crop, and a reduction of from two to four or more cents per bushel is the consequence. It requires but a few pounds weight of refuse among grain to greatly damage its appearance. An amount which would bring fifty cents if sold at the price of wheat, will reduce the market value of twenty-five bushels from four to five cents per bushel, thus entailing actual loss, instead of gain, as some, by their practice, nevertheless suppose. Grain buyers have sometimes the advantage of the fact that foreign matter in grain deteriorates the market value below the actual damage caused by its presence. They put large quantities of poorly cleaned grain through the fanning mill, take out 50 or two cents per bushel in the weight of foul seeds, etc., and are able to sell the improved grain at four or five cents advance per bushel, all of which might have been realized by the producer, in return for a few hours extra labour.

NEGLECT OF PRUNING.

We noticed recently in a pear orchard one of the consequences of imperfect shortening in. A few of the limbs were loaded with fruit, and the branches were bent to the ground. The wood was quite too slender to hold up the fruit. We could see that some of the annual growths had been left two feet or more in length, and no doubt it was intended to bring the limbs out of that oblique angle to trunk of the tree. Had only a foot of wood been left at each annual pruning, in the earlier stages of growth, the limbs would have been sufficiently large and strong to hold the greatest burden of fruit. Fruit growers, especially the inexperienced, are so much in a hurry to get large quantities of fruit, that they spare too much wood upon the trees, when fearing heading back too much will bring it too soon upon the limbs, and they become permanently drooping. This superinduces excessive fruitfulness and premature decay. The first eight years of the life of a fruit tree is the most important, and requires judicious management. If a good compact head is formed in this period, it will need comparatively little pruning after that, the wood of the first consequence [illegible] and the fruit should be steadily sacrificed for the future good of the tree. Apply the knife above, and compare below, and keep the heads as much in a pyramidal shape as possible. In due time, you will have abundant fruit, and limbs strong enough to hold it.—American Agriculturist.

CHOP CRINDR.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without stirring or adjusting [illegible]

PRICE $60.00.

JOSEPH R. WALTON, Travelling Agent for the Counties of Northumberland, Durham, Peterborough and Victoria.

The C. W. F. M. & I. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1859, solely "for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmers," by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Towns, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to this principle, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company flat out with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which is in store for the old and effete [illegible] to establish, but to extend to localities and districts occupied by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men who know your requirements to whose sympathies are with you, and to whom entirely your interests may safely be entrusted.

ROBERT MOORE.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the sad of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but other constitutional affections which arise from it, such as Erysipelas and Salt Rheum, St. Anthony's Fire, Tetter, Scrofulous Inflammations, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Blains and Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Rheumatism, Syphilitic and Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Debility, and, indeed, all Complaints arising from Vitiated or Impure Blood. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his disease vanish, and himself restored by a remedy as easy as it is pleasant.

Not only do they [illegible] the everyday complaints of every family, but they [illegible] more dangerous diseases. The agent I have named is placed in certain grains my American Almanac, containing testimonials of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from Foul Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or derangement of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

As this is the field of its greatest triumphs, and as no remedy has ever been found its equal for the cure of all pulmonary complaints, it is unnecessary to do more than assure the public that its virtues are fully sustained by its present unbounded reputation, and by the [illegible] which it daily receives from all parts of the country. Nor is it necessary to [illegible] the public to the importance of checking a cough or healing the diseases of the throat and lungs. Every one knows how dangerous they are, and how many valuable lives are destroyed by neglecting them. Every one knows, also, that the most reliable remedy for these dangerous diseases is Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and that no person who once takes it will be without it. Its [illegible] and wonderful cures of Colds, Coughs, Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Influenza, Hoarseness, and even Consumption, are known in every town and almost every family throughout the civilized world. Its unparalleled success has given it a name and a place in the affections of the people, wherever they have been made acquainted with its virtues, which no other medicine has ever attained, or ever will attain, in this generation.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or for better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; eat all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially their power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so enslave us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the region of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice

LIFE.

Like the falling of a star;
Or as the flights of o gles are,
Or like the fresh spring's gaudy hue,
Or silver drops of morning dew;
Or like the wind that chases the flood,
Or bubbles which on water stood;
Even such is man whose borrowed light
Is straight called in, and paid to-night.
The wind blows out, the bubble dies,
The spring entombed in autumn lies!
The dew dries up, the star is shot,
The flight is past—and man forgot.

SKETCH OF A MISER.

John Overs was a miser, living in the old days when papery flourished, and Friars abounded in England. Some of the vices and eccentricities have been chronicled in a little tract of great rarity, entitled "The True History of the life of John Overs and of his daughter Mary, who caused the church St. Mary Overs to be built." But in giving the particulars of his life we do not vouch for their authenticity: the tract resembles too strongly a chap book to bear the marks of honest truth; yet the anecdotes are amusing, and the tradition of the miser's pretty daughter reads somewhat romantic.

John Overs was a Southwark ferryman, and he obtained, by paying an annual sum to the city authorities, a monopoly in the trade of conveying passengers across the river. He soon grew rich, and became the master of many servants and apprentices. From his first increase of wealth, he put his money out to such use on such profitable terms, that he rapidly amassed a fortune almost equal to that of the first nobleman in the land; yet, notwithstanding this speedy accumulation of wealth, in his habits, housekeeping, and expenses, he bore the appearance of the most abject poverty, and was so eager after gain, that even in his old age, and when his back had become weak with unnecessary deprivations, he would labor incessantly, and allow himself no rest or repose. This most miserly wretch, it is said, had a daughter, remarkable both for her piety and beauty; the old man, in spite of his parsimonious habits, retained some affection for his child and bestowed upon her a somewhat liberal education.

Mary Overs had no sympathy with the avarice and selfishness of her parent: she grew endowed with amiability, and with a true maiden's heart to love. As she approached womanhood, her dazzling charms attracted numerous suitors; but the miser refused all matrimonial offers, and even declined to negotiate the matter on any terms, although some of wealth and rank were willing to wed with the ferryman's daughter. Mary was kept a close prisoner, and forbidden to bestow her smiles upon any of her admirers, nor were they allowed to speak with her; but love and nature will conquer bolts and bars, as well as fear; and one of her suitors took the opportunity, while the miser was busy picking up his penny fares, to get admitted to her company. The first interview passed well; another was granted and arranged, which pleased still better; and a third ended in a mutual plighting of their troths. During all these transactions at home, the silly old ferryman was still busy with his avocation, not dreaming but that things were as secure on land as they were on water.

John Overs was of a disposition so wretched and miserly, that he even begrudged his servants their necessary food. He used to buy black puddings, which were then sold in London at a penny a yard; and whenever he gave them their allowance, he used to say, "There you hungry dogs, you will undo me with eating." He would scarcely allow a neighbor to obtain a light from his candle, lest he should in some way impoverish him by taking some of its light.—He used to go to market to search for bargains; he bought the siftings of the coarsest meal, looked out eagerly for marrow-bones that could be purchased for a trifle, and scrupled not to convert them into soup if they were mouldy. He bought the stalest bread, and he used to cut it into slices, "that, taking the air, it might become the harder to be eaten." Sometimes he would buy meat so tainted, that even his dog would refuse it; upon which occasions, he used to say that it was a dainty cur, and better fed than taught, and then eat it himself. He needed no cats, for all the rats and mice voluntarily left the house, as nothing was cast aside from which they could obtain a picking.

It is said that this sordid old man resorted one day to a most singular stratagem, for the purpose of saving a day's provision in his establishment. He counterfeited illness and pretended to die, he compelled his daughter to assist in the deception, much against her inclination. Overs imagined that, like good Catholics, his servants would not be so unnatural as to partake of food while his body was above ground, but would lament his loss, and observe a rigid fast; when the day was over, he intended to feign a sudden recovery. He was laid out as dead, and wrapped in a sheet; a candle was placed at his head, in accordance with the popish custom of his age. His apprentices were informed of their master's death; but, instead of manifesting grief, they gave vent to the most unbounded joy; hoping, at last, to be released from their hard and penurious servitude. They hastened to satisfy themselves of the truth of this joyful news, and seeing him laid out as dead, could not even refrain their feelings in the presence of death, but actually dropped around the corpse, tears or lamentations they had none, and as to fasting, as every belly admits of no delay. In exultation of their joy, one ran into the kitchen, and breaking open the cupboard, brought out the bread; another ran for the sheep and brought it forth in triumph; and a third drew a flagon of ale. They all sat down to such glee, congratulating each other on their liberation, that they began to make merry among themselves, at having been so suddenly released from their penance. The devil, it is said, increased their mirth, by suggesting to them that the old man was not dead, but only shamming. "And even were he dead," muttered Jones to himself, "this sheet and candle will not be wasted." "Call'd you me?" was the answer, accompanied by a look which said, as plain as parchment, "You're all out." Somewhat depressed in spirits, Jamie departed. Just as he was closing the avenue gate, a carriage approached. "Open the gate, my good fellow," cried a voice from it. Jamie gladly complied, and then took a view of the carriage and its occupants. "Good heavens!" exclaimed Jamie, as they drove through, "Miss C—— and the Captain, and him with his arm around her waist! Well!" Saying this, and picking up a shilling which the Captain had dropped, Jamie retired to tell Jamie ruined, not in desperation, but in a hurry from the place. He wandered about for some time till he stopped in front of the village school. A thought entered his brain. The schoolmaster's daughter was young and pretty, &c. What more was needed? In a few minutes Jamie was seated in the parlour with the lady, and had told his errand. By all the fates, unfortunate again! But so it was. The young lady was much flattered by his kind offer, and so forth, but the difference of their ages (only 30 years was not very much after all) alone formed an insuperable bar." "The third time tries a," said our hero as he entered the domicile of Farmer Thomson, who had an unmarried sister.—Here at last fortune seemed to be propitious to Jamie. Miss Tibbie was of that age when most women begin to despair about getting married—the fair side of thirty—so she was not gracious to the wooer. Jamie "fleeched and flattered her," he said till he was tired, and all between them was smooth till the subject of religion was started. But here it was. Jamie was a Free churchman while the fair object of his affections was a U. P. After a long conversation on the subject words got warm, and Jamie (poor fellow) seeing all was up, took his bonnet and his leave at the same time and made for the door. "Preserve me, sir, but you're real ill like!" was the exclamation of Jamie's maid-of-all-work, as she admitted her master on the eve of that eventful day. "An' weel may I be sae, groaned Jamie, as he threw himself on his bed. But the thing was done, and nought was left for our hero but revenge. And how did he do it think you, reader. "Perhaps," you will say, "he took a dose of arsenic, and laid himself at the door of his quondam sweetheart's."—By no means. Jamie, as the goes—

"Wasn't quite such a fool."

"What did he do, then?" some impatient reader asks. Listen then reader:—He married his maid-servant, and, stranger still to this day he affirms that he never once repented it.

FAMILY INTERCOURSE AT THE TABLE.

To meet at the breakfast table father, mother, children, all well, ought to be a happiness to say heart; it should be a source of humble gratitude, and should wake up the warmest feelings of our nature.—Shame upon the contemptible and low bred cur, whether parent or child, that can ever come to the breakfast-table, where all the family have met in health, only to frown, and whine, and growl, and fret! It is prima facie evidence of a mean and grovelling, and selfish, and degraded nature, whencesoever the churl may have sprung. Nor is it less reprehensible to make such exhibitions at the tea-table; for before the morning comes, some of the little circle may be stricken with some deadly disease, to gather around the same table not again forever.

Children in good health, if left to themselves at the table, become, after a few mouthfuls, garrilous and noisy; but if within at all reasonable or bearable bounds, it is better to let them alone, they eat less because they do not eat so rapidly as if compelled to keep silent, while the very exhilaration of spirits quickens the circulation of the vital fluids, and energizes digestion and assimilation. The extremes of society curiously meet in this regard. The tables of the rich and the nobles of England are models of mirth, wit, and boonfellowship; it takes hours to get through repast and they live long. It follows, then, that at the family table all should meet, and do it habitually, to make a common interchange of high-bred courtesies, of warm affections, of cheering mirthfulness, and that generosity of nature which lifts us above the brutes which perish, promotive, as these things are, of good digestion, high health, and a long life.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TAKING DOWN A LAWYER.

A story is told of a very eminent lawyer in New York, receiving a severe reprimand from a witness on the stand whom he was trying to browbeat. It was an important issue, and in order to save his cause from defeat it was necessary that Mr. A—— should impeach the witness. He endeavoured to do it on the ground of age. The following dialogue ensued:—

Lawyer: How old are you? Witness: Seventy-two years. Lawyer: Your memory, of course, is not so brilliant and vivid as it was twenty years ago, is it? Witness: I do not know but it is. Lawyer: State some circumstance which occurred, say twelve years ago, and we shall be able to see how well you can remember. Witness: I appeal to your honor if I am to be interrogated in this manner; it is insolent! Judge: Yes, sir; state it! Witness: Well, sir, if you compel me to do it, I will. About twelve years ago your studded in Judge B——'s office, did you not? Lawyer: Yes. Witness: Well, sir, I remember your father coming into my office, and saying to me, "Mr. A., my son is to be examined to-morrow, and I wish you to lend me fifteen dollars to buy him a suit of clothes." I remember, also, that from that day to this he has never paid me that sum. That, sir, I remember as though it had been but yesterday. Lawyer (considerably confused): That will do, sir. Witness: I presume it will.—Another story.

In a court of eminent standing in a very humble and hard by place, the lawyer employed on the other side examined:

"Do you think, why dost thou bark so furiously?"

"Because," says the rustic, "I think I see a thief."

A SUNDAY IN PARIS.

We got up betimes on Sabbath morning, June 24, as it was to be our last day in Paris; and, having dressed and rendered our toilet as complete as circumstances would permit, we rang the bell for the waiter. In an instant the light footsteps of [illegible] Garçon are heard tripping up the oaken steps of the hotel stair, and making his entree and wishing us un bon jour, requests to be informed if we wish to breakfast. We reply in the affirmative, and in a few minutes coffee and the other essentials of a good breakfast are set before us. The coffee is delicious—such as can only be obtained in France, and we partake of it freely. Having finished our dejeuner, we approach the window of our appartment, which looks out on one of the principal streets of the city. The streets have anything but a Sabbath-day aspect. They are crowded more than usual by parties who are going to spend the day in the country, perhaps at St. Cloud, Versailles, or Fountainbleau. The shops, with a solitary exception here and there, are open, and the shopmen are busy decorating their windows, and otherwise preparing for a good day's business. As we leaned over our balcony, we wondered what our Peterborough friends—some of whom are so rigid in their observance of the Lord's day as to condemn the perambulation of the streets during the intervals of public worship, would think of the manner in which the Parisians were preparing to spend that day. Although we had often heard of the way the Sabbath was spent in Paris, we were not a little surprised when we actually witnessed it. In the latter part of the day the public gardens, Boulevards, and cafes are thronged with pleasure-seekers, the theatres are crowded, and dancing is carried on with much spirit in the "Jardin Mobile," and other places of public resort. Being anxious to hear the morning service in some of the principal churches, we sally forth and wend our way to the beautiful and magnificent Temple of the Madeine. Before entering we spend a few minutes in viewing the exterior of this edifice, which is one of the grandest in Paris. It is erected on a basement, in height about 16 feet. Above this elevated platform rise about fifty Corinthian columns, which support the almost flat roof; niches in the wall corresponding to the distances between the columns contain statues of the saints. The principal facade extends the whole breadth of the building (about 140 feet) and is supported by ten columns. We ascend the noble flight of steps which lead to the entrance and pass through the magnificent bronze doors, the panels of which are adorned with bas-relief of scriptural subjects. The interior of this Temple is grand, beyond the power of our humble pen adequately to describe such magnificence in detail, such exquisite carved work, and beautiful paintings and statuary. No expense has been spared to give full effect to the idea of pomp and magnificence. The church is well filled; we remain outside the railing, and listen to the beautiful music discoursed by the choir, accompanied by a powerful organ. At length one of the priests mounts the pulpit, and proceeds to deliver a discourse. We advance to the centre of the building, and take a chair (there are no pews) in front of the speaker, who is attentively listened to by the congregation, for he is eloquent, judging from his earnest and impassioned tones and gesticulations. We are sorry we cannot follow him through his discourse, our limited knowledge of the French language only enabling us to perceive that the betrayal and death of our Saviour is the subject. We leave this gorgeous temple, having in view a visit to Pere-la-Chaise, or the Cemetary of the East.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S PRUDENCE.

The London correspondent of the New York Sun says:—I was told the other day an anecdote of the Queen, which illustrates her good sense and real desire to promote the welfare of her subjects. She has agreed to have her portrait taken for the gratification of such of her subjects as might desire to possess the counterpart presentment of their ruler. She presented herself in a plain black silk, without a particle of ornament. The photographer ventured to suggest that she should send for some jewels. 'No,' said the Queen, 'this photograph is to go among my people, and I wish to do all in my power to discourage extravagance.' It is such little anecdotes as these that have secured the Queen a high place in the regard of the people. I have everywhere heard her spoken of with affectionate respect."

A SOMNAMBULIST DROWNED.

A painful and sad affair occurred at Paris, C. W., last week, which cast a gloom over that village. The wife of Mr. Alexander Reed, a gentleman formerly connected with the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway, got up in the night in her sleep and walked into the cistern, the top of which was open, where she was found drowned the next morning. She was in the habit of getting up in her sleep.

The Rev. Daniel Waldo says:—"I am an old man. I have seen near a century. Do you want to know how to grow old slowly and happily Let me tell you. Always eat slowly—anticipate well. Go to your occupation smiling. Keep a good natured look a soft temper everywhere. Cultivate a good memory, and to do this you must be communicative; repeat what you have read; talk about it. Dr. Johnson's great memory was owing to his communicativeness."

"Good morning, Mr. Hancock, have you got any thing new that would make good tops-coats?"

"Not exactly, but I have got a cote that would keep a hot-ass dark."

An Irishman tells of a fight in which there was only one whole nose left in the crowd, "an' that same belonged to the boy-baste."

REMARKABLE INSTANCE OF THE SAGACITY OF A DOG.

We have before observed in the columns of the Union the apparent exercise of reasoning powers bordering at a probable conclusion, together with the wonderful instinct possessed by a favorite dog belonging to her friend [illegible]. We have another story to relate of the sagacity, which shows his disposition in a very favorable manner, and the whole is corroborated by the gentleman who witnessed the transaction.

A few days since, he was noticed reclining upon the sidewalk, looking as if asleep, yet an attentive observer would have noticed that something weighed heavily upon his mind, for even when spoken to by his master, he seemed unwilling to quit his position and was finally left to enjoy his supposed slumbers. "Rollo," however, was only playing "possum—that is, sleeping with one eye open, and the secret of his action was ere long explained to the loiterers who were watching him.

Soon a small terrier passed along, and observing a piece of meat in the gutter straightway made for it, and with his mouth open, was in the act of seizing it, when, with a single bound, "Rollo" had him by the nape of the neck, and giving him one shake away went the terrier, heels over head into the middle of the street! The curiosity of the spectators was now unbounded, and quite a number of persons collected to watch the strange proceedings—still the dog retained his gravity, continuing a faithful sentinel over the little piece of meat. Several of his canine brethren in the mean time passed that way, but not one of them would be allow to touch the seemingly luscious morsel, so temptingly displayed. The smaller ones he would serve in the same way he had the terrier, while to the larger of his companions he gave a growl with a shake of the head, as if saying, "Touch not, taste not, handle not," and his dogged commands were obeyed in each instance.

Finally, a large hog came grunting along—one of the dirty, filthy specimens of porkdom usually seen on that street, and now was it that Rollo's eyes were wide open, while a sort of tremor seemed to agitate his body even to the extremity of his tail. His hogship approached—turned over the meat with his snout, and finally took it into his mouth, and no effort was made to restrain him in the act by the sentinel who had been so faithfully protecting his own species.—But the instant the hog had swallowed the meat, what a change came over Rollo! He jumped from his resting place, ran into the store, then out again, and up and down the sidewalk. For a long time, his master had no control over his actions so full of joy and merriment; for, if ever a dog did laugh and laugh all over, it was Rollo that memorable morning.

But to conclude our story: A good hog was lost to its owner that day, for the meat the animal had partaken of was poisoned, and had been dropped there by a policeman for the destruction of the canine species, rather than hogs. It may well be said that "Rollo is worth owning."—Union.

A LOVE EXPERIENCE, WITH A MORAL.

The announcement of the late marriage of Senator Lafayette S. Foster, of Connecticut, recalls to one of our exchanges the following incident in his private history:

During the period of his law study in the south-eastern portion of the State, he became acquainted with a young lady of prepossessing appearance, and more than ordinary accomplishments—a daughter of parents of the highest respectability, and moving in the most fashionable circles of the vicinity. With her he entered one of the earliest pleas, and commenced his first suit. That he was successful is evident from the fact that shortly after his admission to the bar, and having obtained an honorable position and business connection, arrangements for consummating the marriage were made, and all went off harmoniously until a short time before the appointed day. During his visit one evening, he remarked that he believed all necessary arrangements for the wedding were made, and the route for their bridal tour decided.

He added: "On our return we shall devote a short time to our friends here, after which, if you please, we will pay a short visit to my old father and mother, and spend a few days with them." Now, Lafayette was always a good boy, and was taught to honor his father and mother, which early to him became a pleasure as well as a duty. He had received from them words of love and encouragement, which had done for him without money [for they were poor,] what money never could have done, and through all his privations and struggles to obtain an education and position in life, he had been stimulated by the thought of the pleasure his success would give them, and he looked forward to the day when, with his chosen one, he should meet them beneath his humble roof, and receive again their blessings, as to be one of the happiest he should ever experience.

For a few moments the lady kept silence She then said: "Mr. Foster, you know I have been educated with different ideas from yours and have always associated with people whose manners and style of living is different from those of your parents, and though I shall make no objections to your proposed visit, I wish you to understand that I shall not desire to associate with people of that class."

Nothing could have surprised him more than to hear these words from her lips.—For a few moments he walked the room seemingly half bewildered. Then taking his hat in his hand, he turned, and with words more emphatic than refined, said: "Madam, I am glad I have found you out in time. You may go to the devil!"

The last we heard of the latter she was still living, an ancient maiden, living somewhere in the vicinity of Pumpkin Hook, with her old mother, living with honor the highest noble calling to which his fellow-citizens could promote him.

SHORTNESS OF TIME.

Let one moment be spent in meditation, and what are our thoughts in regard to the changes of nature? We are at once led to reflect upon the shortness of time, and it passes in passing away, even the fate of the leaf by the force of the autumnal breeze whispers "passing away!" We measure our days, and only a few more days and we will be numbered with the dead. To-day we see the smiling infant of the tender mother, borne to the tomb, and see another mark has rolled around, one in the prime of life has quit the stage of action. This reminds us that it is not the old alone, reader Sir, Man's life is comparatively of few days, though he may live and his three score years, when he comes to die it seems as though he had lived but one day. He looks back on his life as a mere dream—a shadow, says one that is told, and perhaps dies a miserable death by postponing known duties while in health.—Dear young reader, if you have never begun to make that preparation for death, but say how you to begin to-day, for to-morrow is not yours, and perhaps before this paragraph you rises you may be ushered into eternity.

It may be your turn next to be laid in that silent churchyard. Well may we adopt the language of the poet when he says, "To-day we bloom, to-morrow wither." We are here led to ask the question, why are men so eager after the things of this life, which is but for a moment, while the one thing needful is forgotten, that which is to last through eternity? We live here one day for an eternity. Dear young reader, only think of this living here one day, compared to eternity, for an eternal hour of happiness or woe beyond the grave. Then can you not spend that day in serving and fearing an all-wise and merciful God: and when that day is drawing to a close you will not regret spending your morning, your noon, and your evening, in living for holiness, and when your sun is setting, you can close your eyes upon the day of your life, to open in a brighter world.

THE ROMANCE OF RASCALITY.

We published the particulars of a [illegible] what extensive robbery—$1,500 worth of jewelry having been taken from a gentleman's dwelling-house in broad day, when the family were in another apartment.—Soon after the robbery was made known to the police, officers Coulson and Spracks, of the Fifth Precinct, arrested three young men, named Joseph Schultz, Samuel Mishop, and Frank Bennett; who were subsequently taken before Justice Cobbins and remanded for a future hearing at short time. The subsequent efforts of the officers to ferret out the guilty parties, and recover the stolen jewels, led to a discovery of an organized band of thieves, who have their rendezvous in a small obscure room in a stable of Second street, E. D. The band consists of ten members, who are regularly enrolled and banded together for stealing. They have a written constitution and by-laws, and a set of rules defining each man's duties and obligation of each towards the other. A number of well-planned scenes for committing burglaries were found written out. One of their favorite plans for procuring information regarding houses they intended to visit, was for one of their members in the dark to go [illegible] with furniture polish, and offering to [illegible] some house of respectable appearance, they would propose to exhibit the quality of this article by renovating any piece of furniture in the house that the inmates were willing to have experimented upon. In this way they would pick up a great amount of information that they would subsequently turn to good account. A number of the citizens who have been robbed within the past few months, can now recall to mind the previous visit of a vender of furniture polish. Five of this band—including the three already named—have been taken into custody and committed for examination. And the officers express a confident belief in their ability to find the others and recover the property of Mr. Rogers.

UNPRECEDENTED SHORT PASSAGES.

The ship Andrew Jackson, Capt. Johnson, arrived at [illegible] early hour this morning from Liverpool, which port she left on the 3rd inst. Captain Johnson [illegible] Cape Rose on the eighth day out from port, and was off Nantucket Shoal, (two hundred miles from New York) on the thirteenth day. Had southerly and easterly winds to the Banks of Newfoundland; since then westerly and baffling. The Andrew Jackson also made the passage to Liverpool (grain laden) in fifteen days; and on the voyage out and home has been only thirty days at sea (including two days calms,) and sailed over 6,000 miles, thus averaging nearly 220 miles a day throughout. A rate of speed probably never equalled constantly in a sailing vessel before.—N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

DESECRATION OF THE DEAD.

On Tuesday last the 13th inst., the remains of a young man named William Dorset, about 23 years of age who had died two days previously, were interred at St. John's cemetery near Port Whitby. On Monday morning it was discovered that the grave had been desecrated, and the body taken away. The shroud and part of a white shirt were torn from the corpse, and left scattered around the grave. The circumstances who perpetrated the outrage are not, did their work in a most shocking and barbarous manner. [illegible] the first occasion we have been called upon to chronicle so [illegible] the quiet resting place [illegible] Whitby. The remains, we are glad to learn, have been replaced in their lonely resting place, and we hope that [illegible] will be brought to speedy justice.—Whitby Chronicle.

GARIBALDI TO BE ELBOWED OFF THE STAGE.

Naples, Nov. 1.

We are all terrified at the abrupt manner in which Garibaldi is being pushed off the scene, however necessary it may be under the circumstances; and, legal as he is, I think he himself feels it. "We are now just at the tail," he observed to a friend at supper the other evening; and at Calvi, after dinner on Monday, I think, he made a little speech to those around him which betrayed a bitter and disappointed feeling. Of the Emperor of the French he spoke in terms which I shall not repeat, and Victor Emanuel he mentioned too, but the tone of his speech showed the grief of a man who thought that his life cherished object of an united Italy had obtained a great check, and from an imperial hand. Speaking of Mazzini he pronounced him to be an honest man, and one who had contended for 27 years for Italian unity. Though Republican in principle, Mazzini, he said, had conducted to extraordinary Victor Emmanuel, as being his best mode of arriving at his great ends. There are few things which compel me to admire the Dictator more than his bold defence of his friends, however they may differ from him in opinion, and however unpopular those opinions may be; and of this we have several instances since his arrival in Naples. Mazzini, Bertani, Crispi have always enjoyed his friendship, though he was far from adopting their principles, and, when public duty required it, removed them from his service. Yesterday he came in to present the new flag to the Hungarian regiment of cavalry, in which our young countryman, Oliver Piget, has so much distinguished himself; and after the presentation he addressed a few words to the people who stood about. He urged the people to maintain their love for Italy, and to persevere in the work of its regeneration. Touching upon religious questions, he said that he himself was, and always had been, a Christian, but that the Pope was not, nor was he necessary in Italy. Gavazzi was by the side of the Dictator, and it was not difficult to perceive that Garibaldi thought of the check which Gavazzi had recently received from the clergy, and of the necessity of obtaining Rome as the capital of the future King of Italy. It is a redeeming point in the Neapolitans that wherever Garibaldi makes his appearance he awakens great and affectionate enthusiasm—as it would be their eternal disgrace were it otherwise. Thus, he never comes into the city without being followed and surrounded by crowds, so that a guard is always necessary to keep them off. It has been said that without the moral support of Victor Emanuel, Garibaldi could have done nothing. It may be or may not be so, but it is very certain that without Garibaldi the Two Sicilies might have remained in hopeless slavery for many years more, and Victor Emmanuel might have remained King of Northern Italy. Great as the heroic liberator of Southern Italy, Garibaldi was never greater than now, when he is about to lay down his power and sink into a simple citizen; and I have no patience with the senseless who shake their heads, criticise his acts, and condemn his weaknesses, apparently oblivious of the fact that he raised them from death to life. The Neapolitans have not an honor at their disposal sufficiently great for his deserts, nor Language warm enough to express what ought to be their gratitude. And yet, according to the report of an officer about his person, up to last week not, some than 30 of the citizens out of half a million had entered his ranks, and the subscription list of yesterday shows Sa from a duke and an ambassador at an imperial Court, and sixpences and eighpences from many others for the wounded who have bled and fought with Garibaldi.

The same day he presented the Hungarians with new colors he addressed them as follows:—

"This is a beautiful day—a great day. It is beautiful, it is great, because it binds together with a new tie the fraternity which unites Italy to Hungary. Free people are bound together. Free Italians cannot, will not forget it. (Here the people broke into a storm of applause.) Italians free—yes, all shall be free—and that quickly. From a life consecrated together to the cause of liberty, to the cause of nationality, I have gathered nothing else. I desire nothing more than the right of telling truth at all times—telling it alike to the powerful and to the people. Hear me then, generous people of this great and beautiful metropolis, and if I deserve anything of you hear my words. The canker and ruin of our country has always been personal ambition. It is still so. It is personal ambition which blinds the Pope King, and urges him to oppose the national movement, so grand, so noble, so pure—yes, so pure that it is unique in the history of the world. It is the Pope who retards the moment of the complete liberation of Italy. The sole obstacle, the true object is this. I am a christian and I speak to Christians. I love and venerate the religion of Christ, because Christ came to this world to restore humanity from the slavery for which God did not create it.—But this Pope, who wishes that men should be slaves, who asks from the powerful of the earth fetters and chains for the Italians—this Pope King does not know Christ; he sins against his own religion. In the Indies they recognise and adore two Genii—that of Good and Evil. The Genius of Evil for Italy is the Pope King. Let no one misunderstand my words; let no one confound paganism with Christianity—the religion of liberty with the atrocious and bloody policy of slavery. Repeat that—repeat it—it is your duty. You who are here, a portion of the educated and cultivated population, it is your duty to educate the people, educate them to be Italians. Education gives liberty, educating the people means the power to assure and defend its independence. On a strong and healthy education of the people depend the liberty and the grandeur of Italy."

[It will be seen, by the news brought by the Africa, that Victor Emmanuel has accepted the sovereignty of Naples, and that Garibaldi had resigned the Dictatorship and left for his island home.]

☞ The barbarism of slavery, which Senator Sumner so eloquently described, has received additional illustration in the brutal outrages committed in Georgia upon a man of the name of Ethridge, with cold and heartless finality. He was seized by a lynching mob of Uncle Tomism shops from the city of Savannah, in defiance of the laws that should have protected him, and with an effort made by the officers of the law to rescue him, threatened with death at the stake or the gallows, hideously flogged, and then thrust on board a steamer bound for Boston, without any means of provide himself, his wife and children against starvation. These very facts are buried in ominous silence. The Abolitionists have not even sought to do the Philadelphia lynchers and others the honor of (forged) quotations, and there not by a solitary Anthony or Phillipsian, he started for Canada, where he now is. A penny every fugitive does. He will take care of himself.

THE COST OF A BONAPARTE.

From the Press.

During the last eight years the long peace which followed the battle of Waterloo has been gradually giving way. Every year brings events which forbode with certainty [illegible] speech of war. The short, sharp conflicts of nations which have [illegible] of being transitory accidents, wear the aspect of symptoms of a deep-seated malady in the political constitution of Europe. Instead of being the definite solution of a difficulty, each war has given rise to a new series of embarrassments. No sooner has one war terminated than it has been followed by secret alliances so inimical to the equilibrium of power and menacing to the general peace, as was the case after the close of the Russian war,—or by a continuance of the conflict under another form, and as a preparation for still more serious hostilities, as we have witnessed during the present year in Italy. The disquiet which began to invade Europe in 1855 has continued steadily to increase. The Utopian dreams of cosmopolitan philanthropy and of a reign of universal peace among the nations, which were so general in Europe, and especially in our own country, prior to the French Revolution of 1848 have collapsed into discredit before the stern logic of facts; and people everywhere have become alive again to the truth that the lot of nations is not simply to buy and sell and make profits. Year by year each country has found it necessary to sacrifice an increasing amount of its gain for the purpose of augmenting its military power and means of defence. The very mercantile classes who a few years ago begrudged the maintenance of our then slender armaments, heartily join in voting money for more ships and fortifications, or sacrifice their leisure to institute themselves in the arts to war; the merchant has ceaselessly toiled to revise his calculations by the overshifting phases of the troublous times; and in his counting room, instead of searching as of old simply for new markets for his wares, his eye scans first and most anxiously those columns of the journals which record the movements of war and the rumours of diplomacy. The disquiet is general. All countries are arming. All, in obedience to an imperious instinct or conviction, are sacrificing an extra portion of the national wealth to the machinery of war. The feeling is too universal to be a mistake. It is one of those great agitations which seldom fail to manifest themselves on the eve of mighty convulsions. It has already passed beyond the stage of vague instinct. The cause of the disquiet has become manifest. Europe not only knows that storms are gathering, but each country can tell with tolerable exactness the precise quarter from which it is menaced. And this knowledge is rapidly converting the feeling of alarm into a chronic animosity between nation and nation.—Compelled to make great sacrifices, each people regards with growing anger those who are the cause of its burdens—a mutual animosity, which will accelerate the catastrophe. And whether the issue be contemplated with hope or with dread, all Europe begins again to feel that it is a costly thing to have a Bonaparte on the throne of France.

What the first Bonaparte cost Europe every State can tell, from Moscow to Lisbon, from London to Cairo. The millions of lives lost in battle and campaign, the treasures wasted in the strife, the hundreds of millions sterling added to our own national debt, stand recorded in indispensable history. The campaigns of the revolutionary war were bagatelles compared with those waged under the Consulate and the Empire. The conflict would have died out before the end of last century if the dominating ambition and military genius of Napoleon had not appeared on the scene.—The uprising of that one man sufficed to plunge Europe into the most gigantic war which ever squandered the blood and wasted the treasures of the world. Though waged with less savagery, though waged in the heart of Christendom, that war cost mankind more lives and treasure than even the desolating conquests of an Attila or a Genghis Khan. No one questions the fearful price which Europe paid for the honor of emblazoning on her history the name of Napoleon the Great. Yet every one shrinks from entertaining the thought that Europe may yet be called upon to pay almost as costly a price for Napoleon III. We would fain believe that the period of great wars is past; but recent events have sadly shaken that belief. Napoleon III. is not pre-eminently the warrior, like his uncle; but his ambition is equal, and the condition of Europe is more favorable to evoking the storms of a great conflict.—No settlement can endure for ever; elements of discontent are at work in almost every country of the continent; and these elements this second Empire of the French is resolved to employ in support of an ambition as vaulting though more prudent in its workings than that of his great predecessor. Developing to the utmost the military and naval power of his country, he is ready to intervene everywhere for his own glory and the agrandizement of France. The troubles of Europe are in his eyes but a convenient means for exalting his dynasty. Many of those troubles would in time work out for themselves a peaceful solution, but he is resolved to bring them to a crisis in his own time, that he may turn them to account. He is resolved to evoke the lightnings even from clouds that would otherwise have passed harmlessly away.

The world pays dearly for its great men. A man of powerful genius, when seated on a throne, shakes the world. Each nation naturally subordinates the interests of other nations to its own; and France cares nothing for the convulsions produced by the policy and arms of her chief so long as they conduce to her own glory and aggrandizement. But war is a two-edged weapon, and Governments which love to use the sword may themselves perish by the sword. By general consent, forty-five years ago, it was deemed impossible to secure peace for Europe save by extolling the first Napoleon and proscribing his dynasty. To the present generation the judgment appeared harsh—we acknowledge the attestation of it to be impossible. But if the events of the future be in dread accordance with the passages of the present, Europe, and it may be France herself, will be taught again, amidst disaster, the cost of a Bonaparte.

LOVE AND MURDER.

From the N. Y. Tribune, 20th.

On the 15th instant a case was reported in the Tribune in which a conspiracy of a woman who gave preference to his rival, and on his challenging to a duel and the utterer of a threat to shoot the latter, the result of which was a complaint at the Tombs Police Court, and discharged on the strength of many tears, supplications and promises to forget the enmity he held toward his alleged rival. The letter in which the challenge and threat were communicated indicated some education, though the writer had evidently been in humble circumstances.

Last night the same Frenchman, whose name is Louis Laroque, shot the other party—his alleged rival—in the breast with a revolver, at the house (No. 216 William street) of the woman whose love was in dispute between them. The shot produced a very dangerous if not fatal wound. The name of the unfortunate man is Pedro A. Ornoli, an Italian, about twenty-nine years of age. The woman's name is Susan Hess. She is about twenty-three years of age, and has four children, two of whom are with her, and the others with her husband in the South.

It appears that Laroque, who is a Frenchman, and about forty years of age, was for some time on intimate terms with Mrs. Hess but was discarded when Ornoli began paying his attentions.

Mrs. Hess says he has followed her about and that he says he loves her, but that he is a crazy fellow, and she would have nothing to do with him. He had lived with her and been in her employ for three years: had assisted her in washing and ironing clothing, she being a laundress. When he became acquainted with her he was without means, but being unable to obtain any employment, he assisted her in her duties.—Since then he obtained other employment when she alleges he wanted to domineer over her, for which reason she compelled him to leave, and told him she would have nothing more to do with him. She says that since then he has annoyed her more or less and has followed her about the street wherever she went.

Yesterday Orzoli and Jerome met twice and on both occasions words of a hostile character passed between them. The second time was about five o'clock in the afternoon, at No. 216 William-street, whither Laroque had followed Mrs. Hess; Orzoli being already in the apartment.—Orzoli asked him what he wanted, when Laroque, without replying, suddenly drew a pistol from his coat pocket, and fired at Orzoli, the shot taking effect in the breast. Laroque then made his escape from the house, and several hours elapsed before his whereabouts was ascertained.

The report of the pistol and the loud screams of Mrs. Hess soon brought the neighbors to the spot, and caused the most intense excitement in the city. The Fourth Ward police were notified of the affair and took charge of the premises. Medical attendance was summoned, but the precarious condition of Orzoli precluded the possibility of his immediate removal. During the evening Dr. Salasse succeeded in extracting the ball, which was deeply lodged in the chest. It is extremely doubtful whether Orzoli will survive his injuries.

About nine o'clock in the evening Officer Allen, of the Fourth Ward, found Laroque at a low beer shop, and took him in custody. He does not deny shooting Orzoli. Mrs. Hess was also apprehended, and locked up as a witness. Her daguerreotype was found in a box belonging to the accused. At the station house she was asked if Laroque had ever lived with her, but she replied in the negative, and seemed quite indignant at the thought of being accused of such a thing. She is rather a good-looking woman, was tastefully dressed, and speaks very fast. Her manner was indicative of a fast woman, and thought very lightly of the whole matter.

Laroque has a wild and excited appearance, and might be set down for a crazy man. During the interview between the accused and the injured, many hard words have passed, but Orzoli has never paid any heed to Laroque's frequent threats.

ALARMING EPIDEMIC.

From the Hamilton Times.

A correspondent of the Huron Signal writing from the township of Hibbert, says that there has existed in that neighborhood for some time an epidemic which has proved fearfully fatal. "Within three months" says he, "in a neighborhood of two square miles, there have been twelve deaths, and near twice that number seriously ill. Seldom a week passes, that we are not called to consign to their last earthly abode some fellow being, who, a few days before, showed every sign of life and health, as much as those who now pay to them their last painful respects."

He describes the disease as being characterized by a stifling in the breast, accompanied by laborious breathing; the tonsils or glands of the throat, become violently inflamed, producing suppuration, which generates in such quantities, that it would seem as if the patient was literally choked to death.

Whether this distemper is contagious or not does not seem to be fully agreed to; either theory has its advocates among the medical attendants. Some assert that its prevalence is due to a particular condition of the atmosphere, but it must be a very peculiar condition that chooses a locality of such limited bounds, while other localities, whose physical appearance bears no contrast to it, are exempted from the scourge. That the malady is infectious, we are constrained to believe, otherwise we cannot account for its ravages in that particular neighborhood alone. Its attacks seem to be more general among children from two to five years of age, especially those of an asthmatic tendency, with whom it generally proves fatal; but the adult is not altogether exempt, nor does it respect sex or condition. It was expected that when the cold weather set in, the disease would abate, but the events of last week proved the reverse, for it has seized on some of the matured, and seems to be fastening its deadly coils around them. It has been asserted by one doctor that it is a new malady; that it made its appearance first in France some four years ago; that shortly afterward it spread to England, making fatal inroads among the young, and that this is the first season that it has made its appearance in Canada. Another calls it diphtheria and another says he must wait it frequently in Britain—while Dr. Mitchell terms it Malignant Putrid Sore Throat. So the doctors "search agree." One thing is certain, that it is a malady of a dangerous character, and every means should be used to prevent it spreading from place to place, and wherever children complain of an unpleasant sensation about the throat, every means should be used to ascertain whether it be the attack or not.

Thanks-giving.

Thursday next, December 6, has been appointed by the Administrator General to be observed as a day for Prayer and General Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the bountiful harvest and the blessings of peace and returning prosperity in the land. In consequence we will issue next week on Wednesday evening. All communications and advertisements will require to be sent in previous to 12 o'clock, M., on Wednesday.

THE MINISTERIAL DINNERS.

The continued orations enjoyed by the Attorney General West and his confreres in the Government call for a passing remark, indicating as they do popular sentiment in reference to the Ministry. Unwilling as we feel to be instrumental in heralding forth the praises of an administration which has erewhile been detested—and justly so we think—by a large portion of the Upper Province, yet we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Government at the close of its career is receiving the approbation of large and influential bodies of the people in the principal towns. The dinners at Brantford, St. Thomas, Hamilton, London and Guelph, to Mr. John A. McDonald have called forth the warmest acknowledgments from that gentleman for the honor done him. And we must admit that we know of no instance in the history of Canada where such a repetition of public receptions to a government, or members of it, have been so numerous or so successful. Nor are these dinners over yet. Kingston and several other towns—among these it is said, our own town—have offered dinners to the Att'y Gen., and very probably these offers will be accepted. The opportunity afforded by these gatherings have been embraced by the various members present to define the policy of the Government, or rather to revert at what it has done, and the representations given of the success of various departments appear certainly flattering. The Crown Lands Officer points triumphantly to important regulations introduced into his department, and the beneficial results therefrom; the Postmaster General informs us that he has been enabled by a long course of effort to place the Post Office from a state of dependence on the country to one almost of self-sustentation, while the Premier takes a general view of the important measures carried through Parliament during this and the preceding administration, such as the settlement of the Clergy Reserves, the Reciprocity Treaty, the Seigneurial Tenure question, and many others. In alluding to the charges so frequently made against his government of prodigality he points to successful financiering of his colleague the Finance Minister, whereby a great saving has been effected, as well as to the commercial and general prosperity of the country, as refutations to these charges. In the matter of the serious charge brought against the Government by the Opposition, and the Orangemen in connection with the visit of the Prince of Wales, the Attorney General at the Brantford, as well as at subsequent dinners, gives what appears to us a correct view of the case and demonstrates that both acted as they should have done in the matter, that resignation under such circumstances would be puerile, if not contemptible.—We are aware that difference of opinion exists upon the question of "constitutionality." Some say that the Attorney General in claiming for the Canadian Government non-responsibility in the conduct of the Duke of Newcastle at Kingston and elsewhere virtually ignores that system of responsible government we so long struggled to obtain, that if his theory be right there exists no honorable course left for us to take, but to cut the cord which binds us to the Parent State. The question here involved is a knotty one, and it is no easy matter when Imperial and Colonial rights come in conflict or collision to decide the "constitutional" course to pursue. The rope in hand we can never cast and turn it over as you will, it presents difficulties not easily unraveled. The rights of the subject in Canada versus Imperial policy no doubt was fully before the mind of His Grace of Newcastle, and he chose to adopt the latter, and justified himself when the whole matter was laid before him by the Kingston deputation by observing that as the "Prince of Wales may visit Ireland next year I cannot and will not advise him to take a course here he cannot there."—This was said in Prescott in the hearing of four gentlemen of character now still alive who had come down to induce the Duke to alter his purpose of not landing; what the issue was we all know. The Attorney General as the representative of Kingston introduced the deputation and joined with them in urging upon the Imperial Minister to [illegible] purpose. He was [illegible] for union with the deputation to Kingston and against those spoilt the Prince contemplated to leave the Province, when he went to Hamilton merely to visit his favorite. Whether it be said the acted right or wrong, we don't dispute it; we [illegible] would not be taking actual

THE FAWCETT CASE AGAIN.

Mr. Editor:—Mr. Fawcett does not in the least remove the load from his back, or from his conscience rather, by his letter in your last issue, nor does he disprove a single charge brought against him. He thinks he has given explanation enough on that subject to satisfy any reasonable man; his opinion of what is reasonable is like his conduct in this matter throughout; he has treated you much in the forbearance of human nature, and mistaken wherein consists reasonableness. As he pleads innocent of course it rests with the prosecutors to prove him guilty. I will bring forward two or three proofs of guilt in this letter, and if necessary follow it up with others. Mr. Fawcett admitted to two residents of the township that he had succeeded in "cheating the Yankees out of $1,400." This was after his return from his United States tour. The parties to whom he made this statement are men of veracity and they are prepared to prove their statement true.—So much by way of proof—now another instance: He denies having used a forged document; now I have been shown a circular used by Fawcett in England, with the name of Rev. Mark Burnham attached, which is forged. Mr. Burnham says he knew nothing of the circular until he received one from England, through the Bishop of Toronto, asking if he (Mr. B.) authorized his name to be used on the document. Mr. John Armstrong's name was also put to the circular without his knowledge or consent. Is that not enough to prove the charge of forgery?

The following letter was received by the Bishop of Toronto from the Rector of Bellingham, Co. Durham, England, and dated Stockton-on-Tees, April 19, 1860:

My Lord :—

A person named Fawcett has been collecting funds for building the Church of Otonabee in your Lordship's diocese. He possesses a letter in your best name, for does he disprove a single charge brought against him. He thinks he has given explanation enough on that subject to satisfy any reasonable man; his opinion of what is reasonable is like his conduct in this matter throughout; he has treated you much in the forbearance of human nature, and mistaken wherein consists reasonableness. As he pleads innocent of course it rests with the prosecutors to prove him guilty. I will bring forward two or three proofs of guilt in this letter, and if necessary follow it up with others. The following letter was received by the Bishop of Toronto from the Rector of Bellingham, Co. Durham, England, and dated Stockton-on-Tees, April 19, 1860:

My Lord :—

A person named Fawcett has been collecting funds for building the Church of Otonabee in your Lordship's diocese. He possesses a letter in your Lordship's hand-writing and your seal, authorizing him to collect subscriptions in England for the said Church. He also shows stone gods, and a pipe of peace which was given him on making peace between two chiefs (red Indians) and other articles and credentials. He also states that he has sent off £300 to be applied to the building of the said Church. He collected considerable sums additional—I know he had good success in this diocese. The Bishop of Durham gave him £5 on the strength of your Lordship's letter, whose hand-writing the Bishop recognised. I beg to inform your Lordship that considerable discredit and suspicion has been raised against T. Fawcett's proceedings from the fact that he has told very different stories at different places. He has also made false representations, and false entries in his books. He called upon me one morning and as I could not satisfy myself whether he was the man he represented himself to be, I declined to give him money; but on his great importunity for the smallest trifle I at last gave him 2s 6d. I soon ascertained however that he had put me down for £1 2s 6d, and so he succeeded in getting several sums more or less from my parishioners, more certainly than he could have done had he told the truth about my donation. On being asked why a neighboring clergyman had not subscribed he replied that the said clergyman was going to preach a sermon in his Church in aid of the object he was collecting for. This was quite false, as well as many other statements that he made. I beg to inform your Lordship of this: If T. Fawcett is authorized by your Lordship to raise subscriptions in England in behalf of the said Church I feel it my duty to inform your Lordship of his proceedings that came under my notice. If he is not authorized by your Lordship and if he falsely represents those letters and testimonials he produces, the sooner a stop is put to his proceedings the better. I believe he has obtained very large sums of money. He says he went from this neighborhood to America some 30 years ago and probably may remain here some time collecting for the Church of Otonabee.—A note from your Lordship would clear up the difficulty and tend to satisfy myself and other friends who do not wish to be imposed upon, but wish well to your Lordship's diocese and the church of Otonabee if it is still unfinished.

I remain, &c."

Comment on the above is quite unnecessary, unless to explain how the Bishop of Toronto was deceived into giving him an autograph letter. Fawcett with the aid of the circular which had Rev. Mr. Burnham's forged signature attached succeeded in getting the Bishop's recommendation to the people of England. Is that not proof positive of guilt?

A gentleman in Ashburnham received a paper from Stockton containing a caution against giving any money to an imposter named Fawcett, which I am sorry was lost or I might reproduce it here.

Three points made. If necessary to write again I will swell the list. In the meantime I hope Mr. Fawcett will come forward and "make a clean breast of it." Let him give up the money he collected for the Church and be at peace with his conscience and his fellow men. If not let him rest assured that this will not stop at a newspaper exposition, but will assume the form of a suit at law, in which I will be sustained by the whole of OTONABEE.

Nov. 27, 1860.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Before closing this controversy, I claim a little space to reply to "Vox Veritatis." To justify himself in using the reproachful epithet—'Anabaptist'—he quotes the Imp. Lex. and adds a sentence not at all in the explanation of that term, as the said work before me shows. That explanation gives only a part of the truth held by Baptists. It says nothing of faith, which Baptists hold to be, as well as immersion, a necessary condition to the validity of baptism, Acts 8, 37. Now, I repeat, that V. V.'s persisting to apply to baptists, an epithet never adopted by them—that does not adequately set forth their principles—and one by which their enemies in former days stigmatized them, shows a spirit other than christian. Baptists do not re-baptise.—They hold that there is but one baptism. And "as it is appointed unto men once to die," so baptism to be, as divinely instituted, a fit emblem of that event, is only once to be observed.

I have already proved from Scripture, that in order to be valid, baptism must be by immersion, and its subjects believers.—Has "V. V." overthrown one of my positions, or disproved one of the facts I have adduced in proof of those points? Has he refuted one of the facts I have adduced from church history? The letters, indeed, abound with bold and sweeping assertions, but these without proof fall to the ground. Let him "thoroughly" know what I ask," and say, as well, at least, if he means to do. The charge he made against the Baptists is one of the most unfounded and untrue ever brought against a christian denomination. What would he think of me, were I "to make the heavy charge against the whole tribe of" Presbyterians—"that they deny the personal agency of the Holy Spirit and the Divinity of Christ," &c., and then ask him to answer seven questions which I might please to dictate, and then add that "a general answer will neither satisfy me, nor the people of Peterboro'—I want a categorical answer!" Would he not regard me as one of the most unscrupulous and unprincipled of men? It is very questionable if the people of Peterboro' are "satisfied," either with his assertions or questions. How does he treat the questions asked by "J. S." which are about as relevant as his own? I submit that it would be as well that "V. V." himself, "should listen three years, before he asks any more questions.

I am not obliged to answer a single question of "V. V.'s." He ought to know when proof lies on himself and when it lies on his opponent. Has he not shown great temerity to enter the lists, when he does not know the fundamental laws of the arena? Has he not "shown himself utterly unacquainted with the established facts in the controversy which he has undertaken to conduct?"

Besides other books that might be referred to, in Dr. Hiscox's "Baptist Church Directory," (Sheldon & Co., N. Y.) the principles and practices of Baptists are set forth, and they will be found to be as Scriptural as those, at least, of "V. V.'s own church, as set forth in their "standards."—From a careful perusal of the said book, he would see how little ground he had for his charge.

Who deny the old Testament any more than the New, to be the word of God? At the same time, to go back to Judaism for direction respecting the christian church polity, is going back to "the weak and beggarly elements"—"the rudiments of the world."—It is retaining the scaffolding after the building is finished, which must mar its beauty and symmetry. Who deny the Divinity of Christ? Who deny the personal agency of the Holy Spirit, or the necessity of his work in regeneration? Who deny the necessity of faith to salvation? But "infants cannot believe," therefore they cannot be saved by the new covenant or gospel. How can they be saved by a covenant that requires faith as an indispensable condition to salvation? "He that believeth shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be condemned?" It is a vulgar mistake to consider that if infants are saved they must be saved by the new covenant. The Bible knows nothing of such a doctrine as this. But who deny that there is a covenant in which infants are included, and by which they are saved—the covenant of redemption between the Father and the Son, in which he engaged to lay down his life as a ransom for the objects of his love, whether infants or adults? Who deny that any go to heaven without the Spirit of Christ? Who deny that to all who go there the blood of Christ is applied by the Spirit? Let V. V. remember that the Bible knows nothing of religion by proxy.

But Scripture does not afford a shadow of ground, either by precept or example, for any other than believers' baptism by immersion. The North British Review (Aug. 1852) an ably conducted Presbyterian organ in Scotland, says "The language of Scripture regarding baptism implies the spiritual act of faith in the recipients." Again "Scripture knows nothing of the baptism of infants." Schleiermacher says "If one should find infant baptism in the New Testament he must first put it there." Even Dr. Wall himself says that dipping was the primitive mode of baptism, and declares this to be so plain that "one cannot but pity the weak endeavors of such Pedobaptists as would maintain the negative of it." Again,—"Among all the persons that are recorded as baptized by the Apostles, there is no express mention made of infants." Neander says "Baptism was administered at first only to adults, as men were accustomed to conceive of baptism and faith as strictly connected." Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, who wrote in the first half of the third century, says "We in our days never defended the baptism of children, which in our day had only begun to be practiced in some regions." "The baptism of infants we did not know." And Bossuet, his learned translator, declares that infant baptism, in the modern sense, was utterly unknown in the early Church, to the middle of the third century. How widely different from V. V.'s assertions are these testimonies of such eminent and distinguished men. Did space permit, not were it necessary, their number could be greatly multiplied. Now, will it not appear evident to every impartial mind that Scripture baptism, to be valid, must be by immersion, and its subjects believers? Is not this truth confirmed by the testimonies of the most learned Pedobaptists?

Apologizing for crowding you again,

I remain, &c.,

Peterboro', Nov. 27, 1860.

Mr. Editor:—Your printer has marred one of my most important sentences by elision. My words were "In such a case as this, I quote authority, namely the Imperial Dictionary, (the best in the language) for the meaning of "Anabaptist," and not as my opponents, who as every one may see, quote nothing else, but mere moderns, and let me add unfounded opinions; which is contrary to the limitation imposed by my original proposition, namely to texts and facts from ancient history."

I will to fight with the bayonet, point to point, and not to dance a guerilla warfare after a flying foe.

It has come to our knowledge that a commission merchant to whom a quantity of poor barley was consigned, wrote to the owner that it could not be sold advantageously enough to distillers or brewers, and, inasmuch as he did not sell to them, the owner had better transfer it to some other party. The owner sent an order accordingly to another commission house to receive the barley, who after examining it, decided that they could not sell it, either, except to distillers, and being Teetotallers, they could not do that. What do Temperance farmers who sell barley to distillers think of it? The last mentioned house did, we learn, also a consignment of liquors unexpectedly sent to them, on which they might have made a good commission; but they declined to have anything to do with the article, although just commencing business and anxious for consignments. There is no idea very extensively entertained that merchants will deal in anything they can make money by, and that dollars will at any time overweigh principle. Such instances as the above will help to correct the false opinion.—Montreal Witness.

LLOYD GARRISON ON SOUTHERN DESPERATION.

From the Liberator.

The election of the Republican candidate, Abraham Lincoln, to the Presidency of the United States, has operated upon the whole slaveholding south in a manner indicative of the torments of the damned. The brute; dastards and bloody-minded tyrants, who have so long ruled the country with impunity, are now furiously foaming at the mouth, gnawing their tongues for pain, indulging in the most horrid blasphemies, uttering the wildest threats, and avowing the most treasonable designs. Their passions "set on fire of hell," are hurling them into every kind of excess, and they are possessed by a demoniac phrensy. To the Christian, it is strikingly applicable at this hour, the bitterness of the revelator:—"Babylon is fallen and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every unclean and hateful bird. Her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. In her is found the blood of prophets and of saints. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day—death, and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." So much for dealing in "slaves and souls of men," trampling upon all human rights, defying God and his eternal law, and giving unlimited indulgence to every sensual and devilish inclination. "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath judged the great whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hands."

Never has the truth of the ancient proverb, "Whom the gods intend to destroy, they first make mad," been more signally illustrated than in the present condition of the Southern holders. They are insane from their fears, their guilty forebodings, their loss of power and rule, their hatred of free institutions, their consciousness of ruined prospects and that they may be properly classed with the inmates of a lunatic asylum. Their dread of Mr. Lincoln, of his administration, of the Republican party, demonstrates their insanity. In vain does Mr. Lincoln say to them, "I do not now, nor ever did stand in favor of the unconstitutional repeal of the Fugitive Slave law; I do not now, nor ever did, stand pledged against the admission of any more Slave States into the Union;" "I do not stand in favor of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia;" "I do not stand pledged to the prohibition of the slave trade between the different States." They rave just as fiercely as though he were another John Brown, armed for Southern invasion and universal emancipation. In vain does the Republican party present but one point of antagonism to slavery—to wit: no more territorial expansion give offence in any other direction, and make itself hoarse in uttering professions of loyalty to the constitution and the Union, still they protest that the designs are intrigued, and for them there is "sleep no more."—Are not these the signs of a demented people?

Nevertheless, there is "method" in their madness. In their wildest paroxysms they know precisely how to proceed. "Will they secede from the Union?" Will they jump into the Atlantic? Will they conflagrate their own dwellings, cut their own throats, and enable their slaves to rise in successful insurrection? Perhaps they will—perhaps they will not. By their bullying and raving they have many times frightened the North into a base submission to their demands, and they expect to do it again.—Shall they succeed?

A NOTE OF WARNING.

From the Glasgow Examiner.

The Press of Upper Canada are reviewing the story of the War Office during the Crimean War. The most influential journals in Canada, are denouncing in unmeasured terms the narrow policy of the statesmen who by his incapability helped in 1854 to destroy the gallant army who conquered at Alma and Inkermann.

In Upper Canada the feelings entertained towards the inhabitants of the Lower Province, is that which a superior and dominant race feels towards an inferior and conquered one, and on that account the apparent slight on the present occasion they have received is felt more keenly. It is not satisfied on the part of the Government to foster by any act the feeling of contempt which the enlightened and enterprising Anglo-Saxon man manifests towards the priest-ridden population of Lower Canada; but, on the other hand, it is neither just nor politic to evince a marked preference for a discontented and turbulent section over a loyal and devoted people. None in Britain, we suppose, would wish the French Canadians to be treated as a conquered people; still less would they, however, submit to the fact that their fellow countrymen in Canada should be treated as inferior to a race whom their own forefathers vanquished on the heights of Abraham. The French Canadian like the Frenchman in Europe, has extravagant notions of his dignity and importance, and his vanity is deeply wounded when he sees the Anglo-Saxon overmastering his energies and resolutions energy. One complaint amongst [illegible] Canadian [illegible] more than compensates for official smiles, that at no distant day the French Canadian, notwithstanding his prejudices, will be absorbed in the superior race. Neither Governor nor Minister can avert the destiny, the doom of an inferior civilization is upon Lower Canada, and the men whom the Governor and the Duke of Newcastle [illegible] to countenance, virtually [illegible] the fate of British America in their keeping. Among the crowd collected on the shores of Ontario at Kingston, when Newcastle would only trust the hope of England to their protection, were men who had stood in the ranks of the rebellion against rebellion and dissatisfaction—men who would be loyal to the British Crown though driven from their native land—from Montreal; [illegible] and green shrubs by noble Dalhousie who still remain, amid forests of the West, the same brilliant attachment for their fatherland and its Queen.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.—The Fort Wayne (Ind.) Times says that a most terrible and fatal accident, with circumstances still more terrible, occurred, in Adams county, on the Credit (C. W.) River, on the 22nd of the present month. A man named Hall, his brother and child were out in a boat on the river, some distance from the shore, when the boat capsized, throwing the occupants into the water. Hall succeeded in reaching the shore, but his brother and child were drowned. The body of the child was recovered, but it was impossible to find the body of the brother. Hall is almost crazed with grief, and it was necessary to watch him to prevent him from committing suicide. He says that he saw his brother sink three times, and that he could have saved him had he been able to swim. He is almost distracted at the loss of his brother and child, and it does not seem possible that he can survive the shock. LATEST from EUROPE.

BY THE GLASGOW.

"By the Glasgow, we have the following advices:—

The Daily News says:—"A week ago the strength of the Bourbon army was variously estimated at from 40,000 to 50,000 men, the latter being regarded as an extreme statement. We cannot reasonably set down its losses by the fall of Capua and the battle of the 3rd at less than 15,000 men. Thus, in less than a week, Francis II. has lost 30,000 men."

The Post's Paris correspondent transmits the following telegram:—It is not true that the Anglo-French expedition to China will advance to Pekin. The Envoys of the two Powers with their suites, and probably guards of honor, will go to the capital where the conclusion of the new peace will be signed. In virtue of a clause in the former treaty, an English and French Minister will be accredited at Pekin, where they will reside."

The Post says, after the fall of Gaeta, Garibaldi's resolution is to retire for a time to private life.

The Times regards the interference of the French Admiral with the operations of the Sardinian squadron on the Neapolitan coast as the most inexplicable episode of the present campaign, and says it requires all our confidence in the ability of the Emperor to persuade us that his policy is not a series of vagaries, the offspring of temporary impulses or the conflicting counsels of Ministers and allies.

Letters from Naples state that Cavazzi had been threatened in his own house by a crowd which assembled outside and cried "Death to Cavazzi." A detachment of National Guards remained there during the day. Garibaldi has confirmed certain privileges which he had conferred on Cavazzi, and the Padres are to preach on the following day.

Although the expectation of an early advance in the Bank of England's rate of discount is now general, the Funds remain firm. In the share market the principal feature was a further severe fall in the stock of the two principal American railway companies.

Calcutta, Oct. 7.—Gen. Woodburn and Dr. Burst are dead.

CHINA.

The silkiest despatches of Sir Hope Grant, General Montauban, and Admiral Hope, relative to the capture of the Taku Forts, &c., are published, but add little of moment to the newspaper accounts. Individual acts of great gallantry are recorded and acknowledged.

Lord Elgin, writing on the 26th of Aug., says that communications from the Chinese functionaries show that the Emperor desired peace; though he had not then made up his mind to concede all that Lord Elgin would demand.

The London and Chinese Telegraph says the latest report in circulation from Tientsin was that Prince Sian-Kolinsin had been degraded, and that the Chinese had consented to pay an indemnity of £8,000,000 sterling. Another rumor was that a late telegram reports the re-commencement of hostilities. There is no confirmation of these statements.

By the Bombay mail several days later news has been received, the dates being Hong-Kong Sept. 17, and Shanghae Sept. 19.

There is a report that the negotiations were not going on smoothly at Tien-tsin.

Chusan had been taken by the rebels, and Ningpo was threatened.

Tea at Hong Kong was unchanged.—Silk was lower. Exchange 4-9.

Private telegrams speak of the recommencement of hostilities.

The London Globe asserts that Lord Elgin would go to Pekin escorted by a very large proportion of the Expeditionary army, and would not leave Pekin without substantial atonement of the past, and the best guarantee for the future.

BY THE "AFRICA."

Sandy Hook, Nov. 23.

The steamship Africa, from Liverpool on the 10th, has passed up.

Victor Emmanuel had formally accepted the sovereignty of Naples.

Garibaldi had resigned his Dictatorship, and departed for his island home on the 9th.

The cotton news is no later. Advices from Manchester are favorable. Prices for yarns firm; but cloths dull.

The bullion in the Bank of England had decreased £320,000.

Richardson, Spence & Co., Wakefield, Nash & Co., and others, report flour dull, and 6d. lower. Wheat dull, and 2d a 6d lower in the week. Corn tending downwards, and buyers demanding a reduction of 6d a 1s; mixed 32s 6d a 33s 6d. Beef dull. Pork steady. Bacon quiet and nominal. Lard firm at 63s a 64s. Sugar firm and slightly higher. Coffee firm.

Liverpool Markets.—Baring Bros. quote breadstuffs quiet, and Stable steaks quiet but steady.

BY THE ARAGO.

St. John, N. F., Nov. 24.

The steamship Arago which left Havre on the 12th and Cowes at 11 p. m. on the 14th inst., passed Cape Race at 9 p. m. yesterday, where she was intercepted by the news yacht of the New York Associated Press. The Arago has 165 passengers and 300 tons of freight for New York, and reports having experienced westerly winds most of the passage. She will be due at New York, on Monday night.

CHINA.

It is reported that the settlement at negotiations will be delayed on a question of money and title of understanding.

The allied army was marching on Pekin, when Sir Hope Grant had a large force to defend the city.

Lord Elgin was to follow the troops on the 8th of September.

The Cantin were deserting, and carriage was difficult.

Two thousand troops were left at Tientsin, to protect Mr. Bruce the rebels, who were known.

At Chefoo trade was obstructed by the rebels.

It was reported in London that the British Government had received official despatches from China that the peace had been concluded between the Emperor of the English and French Ambassadors, but it was generally believed that the Commissioners would not return to England.

FROM GREAT BRITAIN.

The Bank of England raised its rate of discount to 8 per cent. on the withdrawal of £2,000,000 for the Bank of France, which was to be replaced by £2,000,000 more.

The negotiations with the Prince of Wales are named, but not resolved Kirkwall.

The Bank rate of discount and Loan advanced to 8 per cent. on Tuesday evening, and the Bank of England raised its discount rate to 8½ per cent.

Parliament has passed a Reversal resolution to be held early, continuing by telling his compatriots in arms, that an army of a million men will be created to follow him again in a conflict which is likely to break out in Italy by March next.

The siege works before Gaeta are continued, and if the garrison will not capitulate, a general bombardment will commence.

The ex-King had rejected the proposal to evacuate the town on the basis that he commands the troops, 30,000 in number, at Gaeta, and relies on the strength of the fortress.

CHINA.

A writer in the New York Tribune makes the following sensible observations on what is now passing between the "allies" and their adversaries:—"The cost of this Chinese expedition to the English has already reached the enormous sum of fifty millions of dollars, and to the French a third or half as much. The whole point in dispute is the residence of the French and English Ambassadors at Pekin. In the presence of the allied forces the Imperial Government may concede, as it has done before, whatever may be demanded; but without the presence of a force to back up their remonstrances, it is difficult to see what special benefit at all correspondent to the cost of sending them there, is to be derived from the residence at Pekin of these Ministers. Isolated as they will be, and dependent on the Chinese for communication with the Naval forces on the coast, nothing can be conceived of more awkward and embarrassing than the position of resident Ministers at Pekin, after the troops shall be withdrawn from the neighbourhood. Probably the Ambassadors may demand and the Imperial Government may consent to pay an indemnity for the expenses of the expedition, and this, we are inclined to believe, will be the most solid result derived from it. On the whole, we have abundant reasons to be satisfied that our advocates of a military co-operation with England and France in this invasion of China, did not succeed in carrying their point."

—During the gale on Saturday morning, the steamer Maple Leaf which had left Charlotte and had got about one third of the way across the lake, was compelled to put back by the storm.

From Washington we learn that Attorney General Black has given the President his opinion on the questions of the law arising out of the apprehended difficulties between the North and South. Judge Black, it is said, has examined the subject at length, and holds that a State has no constitutional right to secede. Steps have been taken to hold a meeting of all the Southern Senators and Representatives in Washington immediately after the opening of Congress, for the purpose of conferring together on the present state of affairs.

EVERY FARMER
HIS OWN MILLER!

THE NEW FARM MILL,

MANUFACTURED by A. Harris, Brantville, C. W., took the 1st prize at the late Provincial Fair at Hamilton, where its operation was fully tested—one bushel of corn being ground in a self factory manner in less than 3 minutes. No portable Mill was ever offered to the public that gives such universal satisfaction. It is simple and durable, requiring but little power, and is cheap.

It is made on an entirely new principle, which wholly overcomes the difficulty existing in all cast-iron rotary Mills, and will grind all kind of grains in the most perfect manner, and can be worked by hand or horse power.

—PRICE $37.—

delivered at any Railroad Station within 10 miles of Peterboro.

The subscriber has been appointed Agent for the United Counties of Peterboro and Victoria, and will be happy to supply orders promptly.—The new Farm Mill can be seen at the subscribers' residence, on Queen St. south of Hunter St., opposite the Baptist Church.

THE NEW NATIONAL DOUBLE THREAD $30 FAMILY

SEWING MACHINE.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE AGE.

A Double Thread, Lock Stitch Sewing Machine for the low price of $20! All other cheap Machines take the single thread or chain stitch.

IN presenting the New National Sewing Machine to the Public, we do so with the utmost confidence in its practical utility, its complete adaptation for family use, its simplicity of construction, and its real general merits.

We are prepared to furnish all who wish, with our new 'Treadle Attachment,' or 'Foot Power' particularly adapted to the Table machine, thereby avoiding the expense of the Table and castings. This convenient arrangement can be secured to the end of any table or stand in a moments' time, and the machine set in operation sewing at the rate of 2,000 STITCHES PER MINUTE!!

It can also, in as short a time be removed from the table and packed away. As to its durability, like the machine, the Treadle will last for a generation. The price is only $5. Machines upon a neat table of black walnut and iron, with foot power, are $30.

The advantages of the National Machine over others are many and obvious; and, while all double-thread machines cost from $50 to $150, the National Machine, equally as beautiful and practical, is offered for only $20.

They will Hem, Fell, Stitch, Gather and Bind in the most superior manner, and are the only machines in the market that are so well and simply made that they may be sent into families with no other instructions than are contained in a Circular which accompanies each Machine, and from which a child of fourteen years may readily learn how to use and keep them in order. They sew rapidly, and will do the sewing of a family cheaper, and in less time than ten seamstresses. It is more simple and easier kept in order than other machines.

No one who has carefully examined the various patents now before the public can fail of seeing that this Machine is the best adapted to all the wants of the family.

It is impossible for this stitch to rip by accident; yet when it is desirable a seam can be ripped either all through, or up to any desirable point; beyond which point, again, it is equally impossible for it to be ripped except by design. The same cannot be said of any other stitch.

There is hardly any class of family sewing, except rubber button-holes and sewing on buttons, but what this machine possesses the capacity to accomplish. Running by wax upon single thickness of Cotton needle, with the finest thread, with evenness and facility, and with a regularity of stitches unsurpassed by any other machine or by hand. And then, again, the same Machine will sew, with the same ease and facility, through nine thicknesses of heavy Jeans, using an ordinary sized sewing twine; and all the intermediate sizes of fine, cotton, silk, and linen thread, etc., are sewed with equal ease.

This Machine fastens its own work, or fastens its own ends, which other kinds of machines do not. All shuttle machines require the ends to be fastened with a common needle.

The new National Double Thread $30 Family Sewing Machine will be delivered at the residence of those ordering it in any part of the United Counties of Peterboro' and Victoria, without extra charge.

Orders by mail prepaid will be attended to. Office and Manufactory in the premises of Mr. Queen St., south of Hunter St., opposite the English Church, Peterboro', where the Machines can be seen.

AWFUL CALAMITY!

Cured 60 Lives Lost.—A little girl of Mr Pattinson, in the Township of York, has been declining in health for two years, the Doctors for and near were called in but they all pronounced her to the last on end of consumption. How by last remedy was found out by accident, when the little girl took from the shelf (style) what she supposed to be a stick of Candy, undone some of all of it without suspecting it to be anything else, but fortunately it was a stick of Dr. Kennedy's Dead Shot Candy, which her father had purchased the day before for his other children, the next day she was relieved of over sixty worms, some of them 16 inches long. One opinion Am left and she is now fast gaining her health and strength. How many children are annually dying from the prevalence of worms in the system, (Parents open your eyes to this fact.) One trial of Dr. McKenzie's Dead Shot Worm Candy, will satisfy the most sceptical mind. Price only 25 cents, 15 cents per package, or 2s. 50 cents, for five packages—Sold by every Druggist and National Dealer in Europe and America.

Price quoted wholesale at the wholesale Agency of H. H. Hall, Brockville, C. W., Druggist, as our wrapper. See advertisement in another column.

Agricultural.

HOPS.

This crop in England is [illegible] other articles, and prices [illegible] have been higher than [illegible] per cwt. [illegible] crop on the continent of Europe is but indifferent, and that [illegible] will be wanted for the English market from that quarter. A writer in the Mark Lane Express, of Oct. 1st, observes:—"It is in America where the crop is most abundant, and, in probability, is the importation from that country to equal the past. [illegible] the question arises what they come, will they be generally used? We think not, as long as their yearlings keep about present prices; for the liberal caused by them in 1856 must yet be forgotten, and the samples now to hand of the new crop have the same objectionable flavor, and we doubt, if used, will lead to the same results. Opinions differ as to the cause—many children it [illegible] to the hops; others to the pine wood, (generating an acid destructive to fermentation,) with which they are cured; we are inclined to think it arises from the heat if from the mode of drying, that would have been remedied before now, so as to prevent complaint as in 1856."

Hop culture in Canada for the last few years has, we believe been somewhat diminished, owing to unremunerative prices, the deterioration of the roots to a considerable extent, by the frost, and the difficulties and expense of gathering and drying. Anxious hops, it is said in England, present a small and unpleasant flavor. We were told in Canada a short time since, by a respectable factor in the Borough, that several brewers sustained great losses by using American hops in the last blighting year, 1857. Their beer exported to India, Australia, &c., possessed as strong a disagreeable flavor that it could only be disposed of at prices involving heavy losses. We are of opinion that the strong and peculiar flavor of hops grown on this side the Atlantic, arises more from the climate and varieties cultivated here, than from the mode of curing and the soil. This is a matter worth consideration by our hop growers, who should aim to produce an article adapted to the British market, since the import duty on hops sent to England has just been reduced from, we believe, some forty-five shillings to about fifteen shillings the cwt., of 112 pounds.

A FLORAL QUESTION.

Nobody feels justified in [illegible] a blue rose, a yellow [illegible] or verbena. Will such things ever be seen? Some persons think up, and foreign florists are hard at work in hybridizing, trying to accomplish it, but their successes have disappointed. And for this good reason, viz: Blue, red, and yellow are the three primary colors. Take the different hues found in the varieties of any species of flower, are produced by crossing flowers which have these different colors. Thus the original colors of the verbena in a wild state, were red and blue, and by crossing these, we can get shades of red, blue, and purple, but not yellow. The wild dahlias are red and yellow, and by crossing them, we get shades of red, yellow and orange, and white, but not blue. So far as our observation extend, no genus of any flower contains all the primary colors: hence if the above theory be correct, none of the varieties can monopolize all the shades of color. One will look red, another blue and so on; hence the necessity of combining flowers of different sorts, if we would get all shades of color.—American Agriculturist.

THE BEST ARGUMENTS FROM THE GROUND.

A correspondent in sending a list of subscribers for the Agriculturist, alludes to his experience with [illegible] of persons will know too much [in their own opinion] to take an agricultural journal, and says:—I cannot learn my farm to argue the point with such, but if I stay at home and raise better arguments on my farm perhaps they will be convinced that it is to their interest to take such a paper. Truly said—two extra bushels of corn per acre, are worth more in such discussion than a hundred lectures. Let every farmer practice as well as read reliable teachings, and others will not be long in finding out and adopting the secret of his success.

VERY OBVIOUS.

The editor of a new agricultural paper we have just received says in his opening address, "there is scarcely a farmer among us who has not become satisfied in the dignified pursuit of cultivating the soil. May we inquire what is the occupation of the farmers who are not "satisfied in cultivating the soil?"

—Trees and shrubs have now completed their season's growth, and the preparing for the Winter rest. The fall of the leaves gives the signal that the time for transplanting has arrived, and the carpenter will soon present a busy scene. If every man who ought to plant a tree, should send in his order this Fall, there would be such a demand as has never been witnessed. Many farms, perhaps the majority, have no orchard worth the name, and hundreds in the vicinity of cities, who have hardly enough to eat by cultivating grain, might, in a few years, acquire wealth by raising fruit. We urge all our readers, who have available spots, to at once commence the work of tree planting.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of insuring the wants of the Farmer by effecting him profitable against fire, at the lowest possible rates.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these provisions, by the Moral and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto supplied by it.

The Board of Directors is constituted entirely of Farmers, upon whom they know your responsibility, their sympathies are with you, and to whom entirely your interests may safely be entrusted.

ROBERT MOORE.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

IS a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generations;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of this consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as Eruptive and Skin Diseases, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Blains and Boils, Tumors, Tetters and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Rheumatism, Syphilitic and Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Debility, and, indeed, all Complaints arising from Vitiated or Impure Blood. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so compounded that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is assisted to find his health or improy restored by a remedy at once so simple and reviving.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. Hence, wherever mankind is planted to furnish grains my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Sick-Headache, Piles, Jaundice, Derangement of Stomach, Liver, and Bowels, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inactions of the Stomach, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

As this is the fact of its publication, and since its introduction into every section of this country, it has performed, and still performs, many remarkable cures of pulmonic complaints, which have thrown the shadow of fear from many a household. While there is any virtue left in the lungs, or any tendency to health in the system, this remedy will assuredly be found. Many eminent clergymen, in various parts of the country, have voluntarily given certificates of its effects, which we have published in our Almanac, and which we will send to any one who will call for them. Its unparalleled success in the cure of Pulmonary Complaints has made it known throughout the civilized world. There is no remedy which can be relied on with more confidence to do the work of healing, when it is administered according to the directions. Keep it by you, and when you feel the first symptoms of a cold, or hear your children hoarse, or croupy, do not wait for the disease to fasten its fangs upon the throat or lungs, but apply the remedy at once, and thus prevent the development of the disease. Such a medicine we supply in

HYMN FOR THANKSGIVING.

O, let us, while the Almighty showers
His full rich store of gifts on earth,
While plenteous blessings all are ours,
A glorious hymn of praise pour forth—

A wide-diffusing harmony,
The music of our heart-felt prayers,
Thanksgiving may exceed to Thee,
God of our joys, and griefs, and cares!

We glean the harvest we have sown,
A golden [illegible]
Hence long [illegible] flint dishes crown
With joy—we never chapfet for meat.

Grateful, we each may lowly bow,
While all the [illegible] of the year
Shall meet [illegible] the sunlight glow,
That softly [illegible] noon.

We hear not dulcet nor tolled in vain,
For [illegible] gulden fruits are ours;
And [illegible] the summer rain,
And nourished the summer flowers.

For every ray that kissed the earth,
Divinely penned amid the rain!
And every bird that carol'd forth,
Song of the joys that should be here!

Glad sounds shall mingle with the air
Of autumn; while the changeful hours
Shall waft abroad each fervent prayer,
Pure as the breath of summer flowers!

And all the hopeful-hearted throng,
And weary-laden hearts who grieve,
As if inspired with heavenly song
A joyful hymn of thanks shall weave.

Ella Loring's Thanksgiving.

A NEW ENGLAND TALE.

"She is the most wilful little thing that ever lived," sighed good Aunt Anne, as the door closed after her niece, Ella Loring.

"What's the trouble now?" enquired Aunt Anne's good husband, raising his eyes from the newspaper, and fixing them on her usually placid, but just now troubled face.—"What is she going to do that is wrong?

"It is what she is not going to do that vexes me" replied Mrs. Loring. "She positively declares that she will not make one of the party at Grandpa Deming's next week. It is too bad, and I'm no patience left!"

"Pah! pah!" said Mr. Loring, "its only a girl's whim; she'll repent of it when she finds who is to be there."

"That is just where the trouble lies," returned Mrs. Loring. "I was a fool to tell her that they were expecting Geoffrey Hand. I might have known how it would be.

"Well, there's no accounting for the notions of [illegible]," said Mr. Loring resuming his paper.

"Oh, that is what you always say, John; as if we had any more whims than you men!" and Aunt Anne beat the unoffending ottoman with her foot, and twirled her crochet needle between her thumb and finger after a very nervous fashion.

Meanwhile Ella Loring ascended the stairs and locked herself in her pleasant chamber.

She was a pretty little creature, just turned of eighteen, with a profusion of soft curls and a pair of laughing brown eyes, which were, however, at this particular moment full of tears.

"I shan't go one step!" she cried, decisively, throwing herself down upon the hearth-rug in front of the bright coal fire. "Aunt Anne is too bad to try to make me. Nobody will miss me, nor care whether I am there or not. I will stay here at home by myself. They will have as much as they can do to admire Miss Waldron."

When Ella got thus far, her voice broke down, and she buried her face in her hands for a minute. But presently she dashed away the tears with an impatient gesture, and began again.

"What a foolish girl I am! I'm not going to make myself miserable because Geoffrey Deming has forgotten me, and is going to marry the rich cousin. I will go to Grandpa Deming's, just to let him see that I don't care a fig for him! Yes; and I'll flirt with Charles Gregory, just as much as I please. Just as if I'd die of a broken heart for all the Geoffrey's in the world!"

A praiseworthy resolution, little lady! and one which brought the smiles all back to [illegible] Aunt Anne's face, when she heard of it.

They were going to have a grand old-fashioned Thanksgiving at Grandpa Deming's. All the sons and daughters were coming home, each with their sons and [illegible] connected with the family were [illegible] to be festive. [illegible] Miss [illegible] Waldron, eldest cousin Ella Loring. Many and many a time had she been a welcome guest in the fine old mansion, for she was a prime favorite with both Grandpa and Grandma Deming, and with the exception of their own children, there was no one whom they would not open sooner than, for their Thanksgiving feast.

Ella contrived her toilette judiciously in this visit with unusual care. Her every dress; she was determined to render herself look as pretty as possible, the little [illegible] and an old-fashioned hoop petticoat, with its delicate edge of blonde at the ankle and sleeves, and a rich crimson ribbon both of which her glass told often, told her were very becoming. On any nothing of Aunt Anne and Uncle John, who thought she was pretty and charming whatever she had on.

Before [illegible] Thanksgiving [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Deming and Ella found up the avenue that led to Grandpa Deming's mansion. It was just as light, and as cold that Ella had counted herself over with the warm robes, and had [illegible] chicken for nearly half an hour, which was a very unusual thing for her to do. But in the meantime Aunt Anne and Uncle John had [illegible] themselves with the [illegible] though [illegible] nothing about Geoffrey Deming and Miss Waldron, Aunt Anne could not help [illegible] to herself, and Uncle John [illegible]

MINISTERIAL EXPLANATIONS

Last week we noticed the motion of Mr. A. McDonald for the production of the correspondence on the subject of the Militia Law, and the reasons given by the Ministers for not bringing down the papers at present. We now publish the correspondence, which is as follows:

Montreal, 21st November, 1860.

Sir,—I have the honor to inform you that I have been instructed by the Militia Council to call upon you to furnish them with the reasons which have induced you to withhold your assent to the Militia Bill, which has been passed by both Houses of Parliament, and presented to you for the Royal assent.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Signed) A. T. Drummond,
Adjutant General of Militia.

To His Excellency the Governor General, &c., &c., &c.

Government House,
Montreal, 21st November, 1860.

Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this day's date, requesting, on the part of the Militia Council, to be informed of the reasons which have induced me to withhold my assent to the Militia Bill, which has been passed by both Houses of Parliament, and presented to me for the Royal assent.

In reply, I have to state that I have not withheld my assent from the Militia Bill, but have reserved it for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, in consequence of the provisions of the 41st clause of the Act, which appear to me to require the sanction of the Imperial Government before they can be carried into effect.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Signed) MONCK.

REPLY.

To J. T. Hamilton Esq., and others,

GENTLEMEN,—Allow me to thank you for the requisition presented to me this day. I cheerfully comply with your request, and should I be elected to the Mayoralty my greatest desire will be to fill the office to the satisfaction of the rate-payers of the Town. You may rely on my strict attention being given to all the duties of the office.

I am, gentlemen,
Your ob'd't ser't,
CHARLES PERRY.
Peterboro', 4th Dec. 1860.

To the Municipal Electors OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

GENTLEMEN,

I am now before you as Candidate for Mayor, for the next year. I am unfortunately not the first in the field; nevertheless I should hope that the favor which I expect to meet with from you will carry me through any difficulty on that score.

It may be necessary for me to say a few words to you. I think I may say that I have now served a tolerable apprenticeship to the town business, and I know such feel that all that is required to have the affairs of the Corporation carried on efficiently and satisfactorily is to appoint a person to the office of Mayor who will really pay attention to the Town business, who will attend to it faithfully and be responsible for the due performance of his duty. If you elect me I will give my whole time and attention to the interests of the town, and you may depend upon me discharging my duty faithfully and without fear or favor.

It appears to me that the great want we have experienced since the incorporation of our town is the want of an efficient and energetic head of the Council, a man who would be always at his post—who would have a proper control and exercise a vigilant oversight over all the sub-officials of the town and keep them to their duty—who would be ex-officio a member of all the Committees of the Council, and make it his duty to assist and stimulate them in their duties (and any one who has been a member of the Council will see how necessary this is)—who would be always ready, as Police Magistrate, to suppress rowdyism and promote and enforce good order and the bribery—who would see after and be responsible for the due enforcing of the payment of all the rents, tolls, and other revenues of the town—who would see after and attend to the thousand and one matters which it has hitherto, apparently, been no body's business to attend to, and from the neglect of which the Corporation has hitherto suffered incalculable loss—and who would, in fine, keep all the business of the town in motion and attend diligently to its interests.

If all these duties were performed as they should be (and they could not have been by former Mayors, who always had their own private business affairs as their first consideration) we would have a far different state of things from that which has existed for years past. Instead of each retiring Council leaving at the end of the year the finances of the town entirely unsettled, a large amount of the revenues of the town still uncollected, and a large arrear of debt as a legacy to the succeeding Council, people clamouring for and scrambling to have their accounts paid and no funds wherewith to pay them, rate-payers refusing to pay their taxes on the ground that they had accounts against the Corporation which they could not get paid—all the income of the town would be collected in good time, people would look forward, as a matter of course, to paying the taxes, rents, tolls, &c., due to the Corporation, punctually—accounts against the Corporation would be paid punctually in cash, and each Council would retire leaving the town affairs finally closed for the year, all assets collected, all debts paid and a clear score.

This, Gentlemen, is what ought to be the state of things, and all this I do sincerely think can be accomplished, and, if elected Mayor, I will. If properly supported by the Council, confidently look forward to such a consummation. I know exactly what is required to be done to make the affairs of the town work to much better purpose than hitherto, and I feel that I do not promise more than I can accomplish.

If you see fit to entrust me with the management of the affairs of the town I trust and hope, and feel every confidence, that you will never have reason to regret your choice.

In conclusion, as to the proposed con-solidation of the debts of the town, and as to the procuring a sufficient supply of water for the town, as safeguard against fire, and any other schemes likely to concern the interests of the Corporation, I can only assure you, Gentlemen, that you shall not find me wanting in my duty to you or to your interests.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your ob't Servant,
WM. CHERRY.

We pause the hour and question [illegible]
Which watched us through the [illegible]

Still be with us, thou[illegible]
As swift our youthful years glide away,
We have sinned and need thy favour,
O, friend of sinners, be our stay.

Abide, Lord, in our Sabbath School,
Water the seed there weekly sown,
That we poor love our heritage rule,
And our hearts bend before thy throne.

Abide, but as a parting guest,
But dwell and watch our midnight slumber,
The love of thee for every breast,
And each one hearer the angels sung.

Abide with us, when shadows fall,
And darkness [illegible]s round our way,
Help us to hear the Saviour's call,
To his disciples, "watch and pray."

Abide with us when death draws near,
And earthly helpers fail and flee,
Bless thou the spouse, our pupils to cheer,
And whisper, "Come, abide with me."

Widow Simpson's Spoons.

The parish of Bothgate, in Linlithgowshire, ought to be enchanted among the Lothian parishes of Scotland, inasmuch as it formed part of the dowry which Robert Bruce was preparing for his eldest daughter. Marjory, when she married Walter, the High Steward of Scotland, and thus became the progenitrix of the royal and unlucky house of Stewart. Lying midway between Edinburgh and Glasgow, these royal queens of the land must, both out of the common track of traffic and travel, it has been for ages a pastoral parish, of small and rather backward farms. Of late years coal has been found there; and steam and trade, which has felt fain to leave the world no rustic corner, are rapidly turning it into a mining district; which nobody thought of about the time of the general census, when Bothgate lived on its corn and barley, were its sheep both fine and grey, and had but two subjects of interest—the corn market and the kirk session. Among its peaceable and industrious population there was one dame who, though neither the wealthiest nor the best born, stood in her own esteem, above all but the laird and the minister; and her style and title was Widow Simpson. This lady valued herself—not on the farm left by the good man who had departed this life some dozen years before the [illegible]ment of our story, for its acres [illegible] and they consisted of half-reclaimed moorland—not on her grown-up son Robin, though he was considered likely and sensible lad—not on her own thrifty housekeeping, though it was known to be on the tight screw principle—but on the possession of a dozen silver teaspoons. Her account of them was that they had belonged to the Young Cavalier, and had been bestowed upon her grandfather in return for entertaining that clemant to the British crown on his march from Culloden—in proof of which she was accustomed to point out a half obliterated crest and the initials C. S., with which they were marked. The widow's neighbors, however, had a different tale regarding their coming into the family. It was to the effect that her grandfather, who kept a small inn somewhere in Fife, had bought these from an ill-doing tinker for three gallons of Highland whisky and two starved nags—as his grand-daughter, to the tune of his family, most likely to hold fast to such an important acquisition.

In the family recited, in the capacity of help, was Nancy Campbell, aged about 16, who was suspected of having fallen a-fancy to Robin, who reciprocated the sentiment. Nothing, however, would soften the heart of the widow as regards a match, until at last the following event occurred which caused her to give way.—About the beginning time a distant and comparatively rich relation was expected to call and take tea that evening, on his way from Middlegate. It was not often that the respectable bestowed her house with a visit; and Mrs. Simpson, determined that nothing should be wanting to the entertainment, brought out the cherished spoons early in the forenoon, with many injunctions to Nancy touching the care the utmost had to be taken of them. While the operation was being [illegible]ed to the kitchen, in the midst of one of those unavoidable [illegible] which the northern Jenny is subject to, [illegible] of the day continued the opposite of fancy [illegible] the day was dry and ready for [illegible] Robin and Nancy had been [illegible] gathering it in; but the great dragon began to fall with considerable perdition and considerable fall, and, with the [illegible] of any [illegible] by Nancy, leaving the spoons half [illegible] on the kitchen table, [illegible] to the rapid rain [illegible] to [illegible] the door. LATEST from EUROPE.

BY THE NORTH AMERICAN.

Portland, Dec. 31.

The steamer North American arrived here at 10.45 this morning.

The Marquis of Dalhousie is dead, and having no male issue, the Scotch, Earldom and estates of Dalhousie fall to his cousin, Lord Panmure.

INDIA.

The 5th Bengal Europeans have been disbanded and the Calcutta papers say this extravagant step followed immediately after by a military execution. The prisoner was marched around the square in rear of his corps, and was shot dead in the front volley. He acknowledged the justice of his sentence, and met his death with manly resignation.

Sidney Herbert has died from the effects of his wife's death.

The 73rd Highlanders have been ordered from Edinburgh Castle to Portsmouth, to embark for India. The 72nd Foot, picked up in front of the 5th Fusileers Artillery, headed with gaiety on either flank. The 5th were then commanded to shoulder arms, then to pile arms: they obeyed, and were at once marched at ease about fifteen paces clear of the pile. No sooner were they quite clear, than the companies of the 73rd, lying sympathy to the spot intervened between the 5th and their arms, so as to prevent the possibility of any rush to recover them. When this was accomplished, the Brigadier filed the order for marching the dress of the regiment. It was done: out of the empty hut, all its non-commissioned officers refused to the realm, and the men were drafted into the five remaining regiments of the Bengal army. The most fresh recruits on their brigade, who had fought Englishmen's battles all over the world, many of the old and distinguished have drifted from the old Bengal, but from the Royal Regiments appointed, to be utterly heartbroken, and subdued about.

In Bombay there was an organized opposition on the part of the native tribunals to the impressment just like with the unsatisfactory state of the army in that presidency constituted the chief reason of the prevailing hesitation and of the hesitancy to depression. The Paris Estafette, coupled with intentions given to Austria that she must consent to sell Venetia, or be prepared for a new war in the spring, likewise had some effect upon the market, which was influenced by a sudden and considerable demand for loans on Government securities. Rate for advances on stock exchange this morning was 6 per cent., at which there was an active demand. In the afternoon the requirements increased, and applications were made to the Bank, when the minimum was 5 per cent. In the discount market, also, the demand was active. About £20,000 in bar gold was taken from the Bank to-day. It is expected that the Australasian, Cunard steamer, on Saturday will take out some more gold to New York. The railway market remains good, but some depression was caused yesterday, partly by sales to close speculative accounts preparatory to the holidays; most of the leading stocks left off a quarter to three-fourths per cent. lower. The Grand Trunk of Canada railway stock experienced a decline of fully one per cent. yesterday, on the publication of the report of the bondholders, now imposed doubt projected. The Turkish loan is a complete failure here. Its prospects are scarcely better at Paris.

BY THE KANGAROO.

Sandy Dec. 31.

The steamship Kangaroo from Liverpool on the 19th inst., has arrived off this point. She was detained by Quarantine till the morning of the 21st, to carry the mails onward via Galway, there being no packet or from that port as expected. The Kangaroo has £15,000 in specie; 25 cabin passengers, and 193 steerage.

ENGLAND.

The London Times says the President's message is an evasion of all responsibility, and contrast's Buchanan's policy with the bold action of Jackson.

It is reported that 40,000 sparrows are actually starving at Coventry, England.

The Russian Government had received news of the ratification and conclusion of peace in China. The allies were about to evacuate Pekin, to which city the Emperor was about to return.

European affairs generally unchanged. Nothing but quarterly importance.

The Galway line is temporarily suspended.

FRANCE.

The Archbishop has published a lengthy pamphlet against the stamp imposition upon pastoral letters treating of points of matters. He denounces the imposition as humiliating and not to be submitted to.

Paris breadstuffs market improving.

ITALY.

Francis II, calls upon the partisans of Gaeta to defend it to the last. The French fleet would leave soon.

The Province of Viterbo continued in correctionary.

It is reported that the French were preparing to evacuate it.

The Bavarian Minister at Turin had been recalled. The Sardinian Minister at Munich was about to be recalled.

TURKEY.

The Hungarian conference opened at Gratz on the 18th, and practically endorsed the treaty of 1856.

INDIA.

Advices from Bombay represent business still dull owing to the suspension, against the threatened.

The China grass had a favorable effect upon the Liverpool cotton market, which opened with an advance of ¼ d., and exhibits some subsequently fell.

Dodge & Grannis, all Admirals known in the India-rubber trade, failed, owing to delays in the absence of consignments from London. Liabilities £50,000.

PHONOGRAPHY,

WRITING BY SOUND!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most perfect system of writing which has ever been invented, and is the only system which can be truly called a system of writing which harmonizes thoroughly in all its parts.

During the past twenty years, hundreds of thousands of persons in England and America, have learned to write Phonography, and have become its warm friends. Many have learned to write it through the mails with in the great tendency to be manifested of The present system of Phonography is unquestionably the most perfect, and simple, and easy to learn, and write, and read, of any system of writing ever invented. Phonography is equally as legible, and as learned means invented than the time, and the labor, spent on that; in the same time, that a person will learn to write in the common, slow, tedious way, he will be able to write Phonography to the extent of a dozen years. In a short time, he will be able to write as fast as he can talk, and can report sermons, lectures, speeches, &c., with perfect ease. The entire amount of practice contained for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches, lectures, conversations, and to read them with ease.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being questioned with a favorable report of one of his recently speeches, talking by an little boy (only twelve years of age), said that this boy (a Phonographer) could report as fast as he could speak, and afterwards write out his speech word for word, and letter for letter, as it was delivered. Phonography is the only system by which this can be done. Phonography is the only system which can be learned in a few months, and which will enable the learner to write as fast as he can talk. L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now considered to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half House in Canada.

CHILDREN'S DREAMS.

He sleeps! my darling cherub sleeps,
And sweetly smiling lifts his arms
To her who o'er him watchful keeps
A guard to shield him from alarms,
And carves shades
His opening flower from fairy charms.

Who smiles to him as thus he sleeps?
Methinks I see a glorious form
Hang o'er his crib, and round him creeps
Sweet fragrant perfume, bland and warm,
Like distant airs
From lands that know not blight nor storm.

Perhaps the tenant of the tomb,
Who wept to death as life began,
Steals to his cradle through the gloom,
And smiles upon her sister's son;
And shows to him
A better land, a brighter sun.

His sister, she who died as he Drew his first breath on life's scene,
May, in angelic ecstacy,
Appear to him in heaven's bright mien,
And endless smiles
That are upon his slumbers seen.

Smile on, dear boy, still to them,
Thy better Mentors, ere the blast
Of earth and wickedness will shame
Their presence, and their smilings past
In sin's dark night
Again on thee will never be cast.

A Tale of Mid-Air.

In a cottage in the valley of Sallanches, near the foot of Mount Blanc, lived old Bernard and his three sons. One morning he lay in bed sick, and burning with fever, watching anxiously for the return of his son, Jehan, who had gone to fetch a physician. At length a horse was heard, and soon afterwards the doctor entered. He examined the patient closely, felt his pulse, looked at his tongue, and then said, patting the old man's cheek, "It will be nothing, my friend —nothing!" but he made a sign to the three lads, who, open-mouthed and anxious, stood grouped around the bed. All four withdrew to a corner, the doctor shook his head, thrust out his lower lip, and said, "'Tis a serious attack—very serious—of fever.—He is now in the height of the fit, and as soon as it abates, he must have sulphate of quinine."

"What is that, doctor?"

"Quinine, my friend, is a very expensive medicine, but which you may procure at Chamonix. Between the two first fits your father must take at least three francs' worth. I will write the prescription. You can read, Guillaume?"

"Yes, doctor."

"And you will see that he takes it?"

"Certainly."

When the physician was gone, Guillaume, Pierre, and Jehan looked at each other in silent perplexity. Their whole stock of money consisted of a franc and a half, and yet the medicine must be procured immediately.

"Listen," said Pierre, "I know a method of getting from the mountain before night three or four five-franc pieces."

"From the mountain?"

"I have discovered an eagle's nest in a cleft of a frightful precipice. There is a gentleman at Sallanches, who would gladly purchase the eaglets; and nothing made me hesitate but the terrible risk of taking them; but that's nothing when our father's life is concerned. We may have them now in two hours."

"I will rob the nest," said Guillaume.

"No, no, let me," said Jehan, "I am the youngest and lightest."

"I have the best right to the venture," said Pierre, "as it was I who discovered it."

"Coue," said Pierre, let us decide by drawing lots. Write down three numbers, Guillaume, put them into my hat, and whoever draws number one will try the venture."

Guillaume blackened the end of a wooden splinter in the fire; tore an old card into three pieces; wrote on them 1, 2, 3, and threw them into the hat.

How the three hearts beat! Old Bernard lay shivering in the cold fit, and each of his sons longed to rob his own life, to save that of his father.

The lot fell on Pierre, who had discovered the nest; he embraced the sick man.

"We shall not be long absent, father," he said, "and it is needful for us to go together."

"What are you going to do?"

"We will tell you as soon as we come back."

Guillaume took down from the wall an old gaine, which had belonged to Bernard when he served as a soldier; Jehan sought a thick cord which the mountaineers use when cutting down trees; and Pierre went towards an old wooden cross, reared near the cottage, and knelt before it for some minutes in fervent prayer.

They set out together, and soon reached the brink of the precipice. The danger consisted not only in the possibility of falling several hundred feet, but still more in the probable aggression of the birds of prey, inhabiting the wild abyss.

Pierre, who was to brave these perils, was a fine athletic young man of twenty-two. Having measured with his eye the distance he would have to descend, his brothers fastened the cord around his waist, and began to let him down. Holding the sabre in his hand, he safely reached the nook that contained the nest. In it were four eaglets of a light yellowish-brown colour, and his heart beat with joy at the sight of them. He grasped the nest firmly in his hand, and shouted joyfully to his brothers, "I have them! Draw me up!"

Already the first upward pull was given to the cord, when Pierre felt himself attacked by two enormous eagles, whose furious cries proved them to be the parents of the nestlings.

"Courage, brother! defend thyself! don't fear!"

Pierre pressed the nest to his breast, and with his right hand made the sabre play around his head.

Thus commenced a terrible combat.—The eagles shrieked, the little ones cried shrilly, the mountaineers shouted with encouragement, and Pierre, [illegible] only rendered them still more enraged. He struck the rock, and sent forth a shower of sparks.

Suddenly he felt a jerk given to the cord that sustained him. Looking up, he perceived that in his evolutions, he [illegible] with his sabre, and that half the [illegible] severed!

Pierre's eyes dilated widely, remained for a moment immoveable, and then closed with terror. A cold shudder passed through his veins, and he thought of letting go both the nest and sabre.

At that moment one of the eagles pounced on his head, and tried to tear his face. The Savoyard made a last effort and defended himself bravely. He thought of his father, and took courage.

Upwards, still upwards, mounted the cord, friendly voices eagerly uttered words of encouragement and triumph; but Pierre could not reply to them. When he reached the brink of the precipice, still clasping fast the nest, his hair, which an hour before had been as black as a raven's wing, was become so completely white that Guillaume and Jehan could scarcely recognise him.

What did that signify? the eaglets were of the rarest and most valuable species.—That same afternoon they were carried to the village and sold. Old Bernard had the medicine, and every needful comfort beside, and the doctor in a few days pronounced him convalescent.

HOW TO PRESERVE WOMEN.

There is nothing in the world we think so much of as we do of women. Our mother, wife, sister, and pretty cousins are women, and the daughters will be, (Heaven spare them) if they live long enough. And there is a love of women in general which we do not deny. A fine, magnificent specimen of the sex, full of life and health, a ripe red cheek and flashing eye, is something that does one good to look at, as she illuminates the humdrum sidewalks and every day streets. A North River steamer, under full headway, with colors flying, is rather a pretty sight, rather stirring and pleasing—and we pull up our nag to see her pass, and admire the swell that she cuts. Comparatively, however, the steamer sinks into insignificance, or some other deep water, by the side of a well-kept, well-dressed woman. There is no rubbing it out; woman are the charm, blessing, beauty and bliss of life—man's life we mean, of course. Any means, therefore, that can be devised for preserving them should be publicly made known. They are different from any other kind of fruit. You cannot pickle them. You cannot do them up in sugar and set them away in a room with a paper soaked in brandy over their mouths. You cannot put them in cans sealed up air-tight, without injuring their form and flavour. Now, as the men are so dependent upon women for their choicest blessings, a mode of preserving them becomes of great moment, and we are assured that the public will thank us for an invaluable receipe.

Have the feet well protected: then pay the next attention to the chest. The chest is the repository of the vital organs. There abides the heart and lungs. It is from the impression made upon these organs, through the skin, that the shiver comes; it is nature's quake—the alarm bell at the outset of danger. A woman may never shiver from the effects of cold upon her limbs or hands or head, but let the cold strike through her clothing on her chest, and off goes her teeth into a clatter, and the whole organization is in a commotion. One sudden and severe impression of cold upon the chest has slain its thousands. Therefore, while the feet are well looked after, never forget the chest. These points attended to, the natural concoctions of the dress will supply the rest, and the woman is now ready for the air. Now let her visit her neighbours, go shopping, call upon the poor, and walk for the good of it, for the fun of it.

Keep away from the stove or register. Air that is dry or burnt, more or less charged with gases emitted by the fuel is a poison. Go up stairs and make the beds with mittens on. Fly around the house like mad and ventilate the rooms. Don't sit pent up in a single room with double windows. Frost will not retain its form or flavor in air-tight cans, neither will woman. They need air. If the shiver comes on during these operations, go directly and put something more about the breast.

Again, do not live in dark rooms. Light fades the carpet, but it feeds the flowers.—No living animal or vegetable can enjoy health in darkness. Light is as necessary as air, and a brown tan is preferable, even as a matter of beauty, to a sickly paleness of complexion.

This much in regard to the physical means for preservation. There are moral means important. Every woman should be married to an excellent man. Marriage, it is true brings care and wear, but it is the ring that is worn that keeps bright, and the watch that has well answered that gets out of order. The sympathies involved in the family relation, the new energies developed by new responsibilities, the new companionships for all outlays of strength, bring about a delightful play upon the heart and the intellect, which in their reaction upon the body, produce an effect that is nothing less than preservation.

POETRY.

Poetry is the breath of beauty, flowing around the spiritual world, as the winds that make up the flowers do about the material. The love of moral beauty, and the attention of the spirit at youth, which is impelled in the indulgence of a poetical taste, are evidences of a good disposition in any man, and argue well for the largeness of his talents in other regards. For this is the height of poesy above all others to be, that, sympathizing with everything, it blends most other studies of knowledge unrecognized, which in a university shall cause it be predicated of any eminence, however small.

No man honours God, and no man [illegible]

REAL GHOSTS.

The following is related to have taken place some years ago in Plymouth, England. A literary club was accustomed to meet in the [illegible] garden some distance from the main house. Some of the members had pass keys to the garden door, by which they could go to their place of meeting without being observed. It was a rule that each member should preside in his turn. On one occasion, the President for the evening chanced to be very sick. The Club met as usual, but left the President's Chair vacant. The conversation turned upon the sick member, and the loss which his death would occasion. At this point, the door opened, and the appearance of the President entered the the room. He wore a white rapper and a high cap, and appeared like death itself. He stalked into the room with his usual gravity, took the vacant place, lifted the empty glass before him, bowed around, put it to his lips, replaced it on the table, and stalked out of the room as silent as he had entered it. The company were deeply appalled. At length they sent two of their number to see how it fared with their President. They went, and returned, bringing back the intelligence that he had just died. They kept the occurrence to themselves, until, at length, a woman who had filled the place of a nurse for the man was taken very ill, and her death bed was attended by a physician who was a member of this club. To him she acknowledged that she had long before attended him in his sickness, the President of the Club referred to, and that she felt distress of conscience on account of the manner in which he died. She had been directed to keep a close watch of him, because of his derangement. Unhappily she fell asleep, and the patient arose and left the room. When she arose, she found him gone. She ran out and met him just returning. She got him replaced in his bed, when he died at once. She added that immediately after he expired, a deputation from the Club came to inquire after his health. Thus a most satisfactory ghost story was spoiled by a most satisfactory solution.

Once more: A Scottish farmer was returning from a fair by night, a little braced with stimulants, but not enough to defy ghosts. While thinking of the dangers of travelling alone in a territory exposed to these apparitions, he passed a grave-yard, and saw before him, in the moonlight, a pale female form, standing on the wall. The narrow road brought him close to the phantom. He approached slowly; the figure was silent, but brandishing its arms. He then plied his spurs, and set his horse upon the gallop. At this moment, the spectre threw herself behind him, and seized him round the waist, thus increasing the speed of the horse, and the terror of the rider,—for her hand was as cold as that of a corpse. When he arrived at his house he cried out to his servants, "Take off that ghost!" They took off the figure in white, and the poor farmer was conveyed to his bed, where he lay for weeks in a nervous fever. The female was a widow, who had been made delirious by reason of the loss of her husband. She was wont, whenever she could escape from her confinement, to go to his grave to weep, and while there she would fancy every passing stranger to be her husband. If she had fallen off from the horse, its rider would ever after have been sure of having seen a ghost.

Now the belief in ghost-seeing coincides in many points with the belief of having communication with ghosts, through the rapping. If comes on partly through imaginary facts, having no real existence; partly through real facts that cannot be accounted for at the time; and partly through the love of the marvellous, which is so common and powerful an element in the human mind. Our love of wonder betrays us into an excess of credulity; and this credulity shows itself in believing both the spirit rappers and the ghost seers.

The mistake which is the proper mother of all these delusions is that of attributing to supernatural causes any extraordinary phenomena whose causes are unknown to us. This is to assume that all which is within the range of nature is know to us: that our Science is complete; and that if anything occurs for which we cannot assign a natural cause, it must come from spirits, from the devil, or from some other supernatural source. This fruitful source of delusions of this kind is now having a fearful activity in the experience of Spirit-rappers. This delusion, like its predecessors, will have its day; and after it something else of the kind, working on the same principle of human credulity and excitability will come along.—Puritan Recorder.

AFRAID OF SNAKES.

There is the greatest coward about snakes up in Calhoun, that lives in America. He came from the East last spring and bought a farm, and for the first six weeks in the country he hardly slept two hours each night. He had a fine patch of oats on his farm but he was afraid to cradle it. One day he concluded he'd take a look to see if there were many snakes in the patch; so he got his old horse, and after loading him through the gap, and laying up the fences to keep the hogs out, he took an old scythe snath in his hand to fight with in case of an attack, mounted the horse, and struck out into the oats, holding up both legs as high as possible. His hardest got for when he saw a whacking big snake stepping along the oats after him. Away he went right around the oat patch, and away went the snake crowding after him; some times on the one side and sometimes on the other; sometimes behind and sometimes before. He couldn't get out of the lot because the fences was up and the snake kept pace with him, in consequence there was the chance for to warm the old horse to a high pitch of excitement. He went at that rate till every stalk of his oats was trampled down, and the horse just about dead, when he discovered that he'd been running from the shadow of his own [illegible]

SOIREE IN NORTH MONAGHAN.

The fourth annual soiree of the North Monaghan Intellectual Improvement Society, was held at the Town Hall, on New Year's day, when the place presented a most pleasing appearance. On the outside floated the "Union Jack." The interior was tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers, and when lighted up presented a most animating appearance.

One hundred persons sat down to tea, which was indeed excellent, and when I say that the spread was sufficient to satisfy the greatest connisseur, we feel certain that we are not saying more than it deserved.

In the absence of the worthy and respected President of the Association, Mr. Wm. Forster, who was prevented from attending through indisposition, John Walsh, Esq., of Cavan, very ably occupied the chair, and was highly complimented for the rare ability and originality of his speech.

The Secretary read the report, by which it appeared that six lectures had been delivered during the last year, viz: The Inagural lecture by the Rev. Mr. Allen, of Milbrook, subject, "The Characteristics of Great Men." The next by the Rev. Mr. Douglas of Peterboro, subject, "Methods of Teaching." The next by Thos. White, Esq., of Peterboro, subject "The evils of Intemperance." The next by Dr. Might of Milbrook, subject "The benefits of Medical Science to Mankind." The next by the Rev. Mr. Douglas of Peterboro, subject, "The benefits of Debating Clubs." And the last by the Rev. Mr. Gilmour, subject "The force of Habit."

The "feast of reason, and the flow of soul," was ably sustained by Dr. Might.—The Revds. Messrs. Blain, Allen and Gilmour, severally addressed the Meeting. Dr. Might, in a clear and lucid manner, showed the benefits arising from such societies as the one whose anniversary was being commemorated, and hoped that all around would aid in supporting it. The Rev. Mr. Blain reviewed the privileges we enjoyed, religiously, and politically told some pleasing anecdotes to the young folk, and proposed some excellent resolutions which he hoped would be adopted by those present during the current year, namely, Abstinence from tobacco, and intoxicating liquors, and pointed out the happy results which would arise therefrom if carried into effect.

The Rev. Mr. Allen was glad of the opportunity thus offered for all to meet together as they did this evening on common grounds. He noticed the cause of Englands greatness, and said that whether as Englishmen, Scotchmen, or Irishmen, we ought to feel proud of the land of our nativity, but, that in many respects Canada, (our adopted country) had elements of greatness (physically) which the others, as Islands, did not possess. He passed a high eulogium on the Common School System of Canada, and concluded an able and telling address of upwards of half an hour's duration by showing the advantages to be gained by reading works on Natural History, Philosophy, &c.

The Rev. Mr. Gilmour who was received with bursts of applause, was particularly happy in his remarks, and caused the most universal flow of cheerfulness ever witnessed in the Hall, and having thus secured the attention of the audience turned it to good account by showing them the duties which they owe to themselves, to their country, and to their God.

Mr John Kennedy and family added very much to the evening's entertainment by discoursing some beautiful pieces of vocal and instrumental music in a manner highly creditable to them as amateurs.

Votes of thanks were passed to the ladies for their excellent tea, and to the Choir for the judicious selection of the pieces which they performed, and the readiness with which they complied with the invitation of the Committee. When all standing the National Anthem was sung with good effect, which brought the meeting to a conclusion.

It was announced that the Rev. Mr. Allen had kindly consented to give the Inagural lecture of the season on Wednesday evening, the 16th inst., admittance free, when it is hoped a full house will greet him on the occasion. The meeting separated about 9 o'clock highly pleased with the enjoyments of the evening, having realized the truthfulness of the motto over the north window, by finding—That "Harmony did Reign."

It is to be hoped that all in the neighborhood who have the interests of the people at heart will use their influence to sanction the Association, and with such a staff of able and talented lecturers as have already came forward during the last three years, and have expressed their willingness to do so again, there is nothing to dread in the future—still, however, remembering the story of Hercules and the tenamter, that he helps those only who put their own shoulders to the wheel.

SALIVARY CALCULES.

The above subject probably requires as much consideration and attention as any other in Dental Surgery. It is for this reason that I offer the following remarks:

Salivary Calculus or Tartar sometimes accumulates in very large quantities, giving to the mouth a most disagreeable and repulsive aspect, and imparting to the breath not unfrequently an almost insufferable offensive odor. The chemical constituents of tartar is phosphate of lime and animal matters, combined in various proportions, as it is hard or soft; consequently no two analyses will yield the same result. The blacks, dirty, deposited around the necks of the teeth [illegible] such as hard, good constitutions in [illegible] large quantities, is dissolved in [illegible] while the light [illegible] in the acids, but is readily dissolved in the [illegible]. All persons are subject to Salivary Calculus, but not alike. It affects [illegible]

[illegible] Neither is the color alike. Sometimes it is black; at other times it is of a dark, pale, or yellowish brown, and in some instances it is nearly white. It also differs in density. It is nearly as solid in texture in the mouths of some as the teeth themselves; in others it is so soft that it can be scraped from the teeth with the finger nail. The effects arising from the presence of this substance on the teeth are always pernicious, though sometimes more so than others. An altered condition of fluids of the mouth, diseased gums, and not unfrequently the gradual destruction of the alveolar processes (sockets) and, the loosening and loss of the teeth, are among the consequences that result from it. But besides these other effects are sometimes produced; among which may be enumerated tumors and spongy excrescences of the gums of various kinds, necrosis and exfoliation of the alveolar processes, and portions of the maxilary bones, hemorrhages of the gums, and disarrangement of the whole digestive apparatus, foul breath, catarrh, cough, diarrhea, diseases of various kinds in the maxilary antra and nose, pain in the ear, headache, melancholy, and a great many others.

The character of the effects, both local and constitutional, depends upon the quantity and consistence of the tartar and the temperament of the individual, as well as the state of the general health; and the two former of those are determined by the two latter, and the attention paid to the cleanliness of the teeth. If this last be properly attended to Salivary Calculus, no matter how great the constitutional tendency to its formation may be, will not collect in large quantities upon the teeth. The importance, therefore, of its constant observance cannot be too strongly impressed on the mind, and especially upon those in whom there exists a great tendency to its deposition. The teeth and their contiguous parts suffer more from accumulations of this substance than almost any other cause. Caries (decay) is not much more destructive to them. It is an established fact that tartar, when permitted to accumulate for any length of time, the gums become so sensitive that a tooth-brush cannot be used without producing pain. Consequently, the cleanliness of the mouth is not attempted, and as no means is taken to prevent its formation, it accumulates with increased rapidity until the teeth one after another fall victims to its decaying ravages. It sometimes not only undermines the soundest constitutions by occasioning discharges of matter from the gums, and corrupting the juices of the mouth, but it also renders the breath exceedingly unpleasant and offensive. Chemical agents are sometimes employed for the removal of Salivary Calculus, but it is scarcely necessary for me to say that any acid capable of dissolving tartar will act upon the teeth. The use of agents of this sort, therefore, should be avoided. Nearly all, both of the mineral and vegetable acids, are prejudical to the teeth.

Tartar can be removed from the teeth without injury to them, with instruments made for the purpose. After the tartar is removed, if proper attention be paid to the cleanliness of the teeth, (for which a tooth-brush is indispensible) there will be no danger of further deposits.

"We, who are [illegible] experience in editing, and little taste for are tortured with quibblers—made so, not by the constitution of the United States, but by the discipline of the church, but as Dr. Berry was made a scholar, by nature. One says, "Not so much English correspondence. Not suited to our market." Another "More English correspondence. Many of our readers were once Wesleyans." Another, "Give us the news anywhere." Another, "Give us the items. We want to know what is going on in the world!" Another, "Original matter. Anybody can do scissor work." B. whispers, "I have just been talking with a Free Presbyterian editor, and I just thought I'd call in and tell you that he says you must get your assistant to use the scissors more." East Point says, "Lay delegation. Let the clergymen alone." North Point says, "Don't mention any delegation, when 4,000,000 of our fellow men in the United States are deprived of all civil rights." Old Guy would have us sit on an iceberg, and grow green with the mould of the dark ages. Young America would have us suicide by becoming free breathing oxygen and igniting flames. We are accomodating, and as a certain priest promised to furnish the parish with rain whenever his parishioners all agreed as to the time and quantity, so we will do as our advisers bid us whenever they can all agree. Till then we must please ourselves. Seriously, we shall always be thankful for advice, providing the advisers will not be offended if we think best to disregard it."

We would suggest that a rule be adopted by the editorial fraternity which might work well. Suppose the privilege was granted to any one "who sends us new subscribers to accompany it with a bit of advice! How would that do? That would be helping us to do better in three important respects.—It would help Editors to write, and it would give them plenty of readers, and plenty of that which every paper needs—money.

PAINTING A WHITE GIRL TO MAKE HER A SLAVE.

One day last week a gentleman from this city hailed an up-country boat, the Cora Anderson, as she was passing Greenville, Miss., whither he had gone on business, to return home. Shortly after being under way our Natchez friend observed a pensive looking little girl, aged about 9 or 10 years, whose black hair and yellow brown skin would indicate that she was a mulattress. There was something about her that interested him, and he inquired of the captain concerning her. He was informed that she was a slave belonging to a man on board, whom the captain pointed out, who said he was taking her to New Orleans to sell her, he having bought her for $100 in North Western Missouri, on the borders. Our Natchez friend eyed the little girl and the border man so closely as to attract the attention of the latter with whom he was soon engaged in conversation concerning the child, interrogating him in such a manner as to elicit answers not always agreeing with previous statements, and evidently alarming him. This was suspicious. The little girl was taken aside and examined.—She said she was an orphan, and had been taken from an asylum in New York by this man; that her hair was light and her complexion brunette; that the man told her that he was going South with her, where as his adopted child, she would have a good home; that black hair was preferred in the South and position there here, and that he had taken her to a barber and had her hair dyed black. She also told her that if she would allow him to put some yellow dye on her skin her complexion would become much whiter in a few days, and that he had put the stain on. On hearing these statements the girl was taken charge of by the captain, and potash, soap and water being applied, the dye was taken off and the light hair and light complexion brought to light. This protracted matter was noticed by the excited passengers, who were about to deal with him summarily, but it was finally arranged to lock him up in a state-room, until the boat should land. In the meantime the boat had passed St. Joseph, and when a few miles below that town rounded to take on wood. At this point, how or in what manner is not known, the border ruffian escaped from the boat, leaving his baggage behind. The girl was taken by the captain of the boat to New Orleans and placed in one of the orphan asylums in that city.

CURE FOR CANCERS.

Boil fine Turkey figs in new milk, which they will thicken. When they are quite tender, split and apply them as a poultice, as warm as they can be borne to the part affected, whether broken or not. The part must be washed every time the poultice is changed with some of the milk. Use a fresh poultice every night and morning, and at least once during the day and drink a quarter of a pint of the milk the figs are boiled in twice in every 24 hours. If the stomach will bear it, this must be persevered steadily for three or four months at least.

SHALL THE COLONIES BE UNITED.

There are indications that the question of a union of the British American Provinces is to be removed from the field of journalism whereon it has from time to time appeared of late, into the closer and more practical area of legislative discussion. The Canadian Ministry, it is said, will make it the Parliamentary pièce de resistance of the approaching session; and it is even further rumored that the Duke of Newcastle is preparing to grapple with it in some shape when the Imperial Legislature assembles in the spring. There is nothing novel in it that need startle the conservative mind on either side of the Atlantic. It is now nearly a quarter of a century, remarkable above its predecessors for the rapidity with which political theories of startling novelty and grandeur have matured since Lord Durham, on his first arrival in Lower Canada, saw deputations from all the Provinces, and was assured that their leading minds were strongly and generally inclined for a union on any feasible basis which would secure them something like national existence. Those deputations produced no result; for, although the legislative union of the two Canadas followed, it followed from the absolute necessity that existed of saving the people, by wrestling half of it from the sway of a population with foreign sympathies, for ending a conflict of relations such as does not now exist between any of the colonies rather than from a profound consideration of the natural, commercial, or political relations of the two Provinces, as they were expected to be developed in the future. It is doubtful even whether this union has entirely accomplished the ends for which it was designed, or at least in the manner in which it was then thought desirable these ends should be brought about.

The first thing that strikes the student of this question, in examining the discussions on it since the deputations waited on the Earl of Durham, is the number and elaborateness of the essays that have been composed on what we may be permitted to call the practical view of the question, and a little that has been done towards a practical solution of it. For all the purposes of combination except that of enacting the colonies into one nation, they have for many years possessed the power, if they had had the will, to accomplish the most important of the results which they could have obtained under the most intimate union. They might, had they been so inclined, have assimilated their tariffs, their currency, their postal system, their monetary and banking laws, their method of land sales, their civil and criminal codes, their municipal institutions, their railways and their school systems. Some steps in these directions they have of late taken without union, and it is probable they may continue them. But while they have been taking these steps, and their writers and orators have been descanting on the glories of the national view of the subject, Canada has been building up insuperable barriers to any known practicable form of union of the Lower Provinces with her. The "informal convention" of representatives of the Provinces which we are told is to assemble in Quebec immediately, to consider the question of a federal union of the Provinces, will, we may safely prophesy, come to no such conclusion as the Canadian Government in its extremity is casting about for.

The statesmen of the present day, in every constitutional country—and it is especially so in the colonies—prefer to follow rather than to lead public opinion. On this question, for particular purposes, the Canadian ministry may desire to force public opinion; but the ministries in the other Provinces have no purposes to serve in following their lead, and they will be guided in their legislative proposals, whatever glittering generalities they may find it pleasant to utter at the Convention, by the feelings which imbue the minds of their constituents. Now, no man who has any intimate acquaintance with the Lower Provinces, can assert that their populations have other than the most general and even vague not one in favor of a union of the Lower Provinces even; while, with regard to a union of the Lower Provinces with Canada, there is a very firm belief that the essential and most marked characteristic of such a union, in any shape, would place burthens upon the Lower Provinces which Canada has too rashly undertaken, no portion of which are they inclined to have shifted on to their shoulders. The Canadian promoters of union will doubtless say that they will not ask the Lower Provinces to share their burth ns; but they must do so, or be prepared to replace, by direct taxation on themselves, those fiscal duties which equal, in many items, the duties of the United States tariff, and in many exceed it, though Canada has not a soldier or a marine or a diplomatist to support. And we know very well that Canada is not prepared for direct taxation any more than New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or Prince Edward's Island are desirous of quintupling, trebling, or even doubling their import duties. Grand as the idea of nationality may be, our friends in the Lower Provinces are not Napoleonic enough to assume onerous burthens for its sake. They will not against it those added burthens, and they will also consider how far the interests of grain-growing Canada West are likely to come into collision with their timber-producing and ship-building and fishing interests; and how far, in any question that may arise between them, the weight of a Canadian connection is likely to drive them to the wall. We are not setting up these things as bugbears of our own creation; they are matters of grave concernment in the consideration of a union of all the Provinces, and this one respecting the prospect of diverse interests springing up at the extremities of the proposed confederacy is likely to grow rather than diminish when Red River, and even further Columbia, seek to be admitted, as they soon would, to the new Union. Nor is this very question likely to be rendered less prominent from the imminent and mayhap deadly struggle proceeding from this very cause in this Union. It is plain that the struggle between these Southern and Northern States is as much a question of commercial interests as of negroes. South Carolina suffers no less of negroes, but she suffers, or supposes she does, from the tariff by which Northern industry is crystallized into a rich and costly existence. She may be right or wrong in this; but the question would never have assumed the control of the State if it had not been chiefly a producing State, and far removed from those States which are mainly manufacturing. If a similar question should [illegible] a United States and Canada, what would be the result? [illegible] it would be scarcely later of News from Canada West lately for a dissolution of its union with the eastern Provinces, when it was supposed that Mr. Galt's tariff would [illegible] the trade of the Lower at the [illegible] Ports. Yet [illegible] convince such as can find "no stronger arguments in favor of federation, than those which may be derived from the fact that under it the United States have made the most satisfactory progress in everything that can make a country great and powerful," accompanied as that argument is with the opinion that Slavery has not "endangered the stability of the Union," which we know to be false; but the argument itself is akin to that which would prove the advantage of an absolute monarchy by citing the growth in wealth and power of France under the Napoleons. The growth of the Provinces themselves, in their independent condition, proves the fallacy of the argument, for they have increased in wealth, in population, and in general prosperity, at a greater rate than have the United States, while they lack nothing which the States possess but their nationality; and in exchange for that, the Lower Province, at least, have the satisfaction of enjoying comparative exemption from a taxation greater in proportion to the necessity for it, than that raised by the Imperial Government from the British people.

The arguments of the Convention, when it meets, we shall await with eager expectation. They will show us exactly what shape the question assumes in each of the Colonies. It is one of undoubted [illegible] pursue the subject in all its bearings. The time will speedily come when there shall be a nation, or nations, British as well in name as in nature, created out of the present loyal Provinces. All we desire is that when created into nations, their elements shall conduce to that stability which is the characteristic glory of the Empire of which they are now important parts.—Scottish American.

THE TOM SAYERS' ANNUITY FUND.

The subscription forwarded to us for the ex-champion, in token of the estimation in which he is held by the public generally, for the indomitable courage displayed in his last pugilistic encounter, were on Tuesday, the 4th December, handed over to us by the gentlemen who have kindly consented to act as trustees for Tom in the matter, and to lay out the money to the best advantage for Sayers during his lifetime, and his children after him. The money, which amounts to the extraordinary sum of £2,814, will be so secured that it cannot be touched by Tom's creditors, should he be so imprudent as to get himself insolved, neither will Tom himself be able to assign away or anticipate his income. It is, moreover, expressly provided that in the event of his again entering the ring, the trustees shall at once denote the whole amount to the interests of his children, so that it will be seen all future challenges will be utterly useless, and at this no one will rejoice more than we do ourselves. Tom Sayers, by his exploits in the P. R., even had the "Great International Prize Fight" so called, been omitted, had already done quite enough for glory without seeking further honors in a field better left to younger and fresher men than himself. Such a collection raised and forwarded to one Journal for such an object, is without parallel in the of the press. The Times, during the Crimean war, received upwards of £20,000 for our brave but suffering soldiers; and not two years ago the same journal, after its appeal for the Fieldlane and other refugees, raised something like 8,000. One of these subscriptions was for a neglected and decimated army, the other for the succor of thech mydleoutwhr destitute of our fellow creatures in this metropolis. The present case, however, is widely different. The £2,814 represents the voluntary offerings of all classes of society—from the peer to the journeyman baker, and even the countermonger—to one individual, and he a member of the Prize Ring! No stronger proof we think could have been exhibited by our countrymen at home and abroad—for scarcely one of our widely scattered colonies has not sent its contribution—of their approbation of all that is manly and endearing than the above munificent subscription; and as this is probably the last time we shall have to allude to what was termed the international mill, some slight recapitulation of the points which earned for Sayers this testimonial may not be out of place. Here was a man past the prime of life, not less than five inches shorter, and a stone and a half lighter than his gigantic opponent—that opponent having won the toss, took, as he was doubtless entitled to do, the higher ground, and for more than half the time the contest lasted maintained the defensive of his own corner, so that Tom had to go to him and fight up hill, thereby giving away at least another two inches. Tom lost the use of his right arm at the commencement of the battle, and yet continued to face his man with most unflinching bravery for upwards of two hours; and moreover, with his one hand to inflict upon him such an amount of punishment as none but the very gamest of the game would have taken without crying "a go."—As to what the result might have been had not the ring been broken in when the police arrived, and when the American was endeavoring to strangle Tom on the ropes, it is useless now to speculate. Our own opinion has been freely given more than once, and that it may go forth to the world again and for the last time we here beg to repeat it; it is, that had the ring not been broken in at the time it was, and the referee forced from his position, he must have awarded the battle to Tom, as in the very round when the disturbance occurred Sayers twice reached the ground with his knees while held by the neck, and was on each occasion deliberately lifted off again and held by his opponent, each of which acts was deliberately foul, and must have been so decided had it been seen by the referee. Had this strangling not taken place, there is not the most remote doubt on the mind of any just and impartial man that two or three more rounds must have reduced the Yankee to utter darkness. In taking leave of the subject we have only to say that the science and pluck displayed by Tom Sayers on this occasion not only gratified the vanity of his countrymen, but would have done more to restore the fallen fortunes of the ring, had Tom's less fortunate composers chosen to avail themselves of it in the right way, than any event of modern times. Unfortunately however, this has not been the case; and occurrences have taken place since, which if the members of the P. R. do not stick together, will cause the ring to be numbered among the customs of the past, and render such an exhibition of pluck, endurance and science as the fight at Farnborough an impossibility. This will was freely discussed, not only in all the circles in this country, but all over the continent of Europe, and it was obvious, from remarks that have come to our ears, that it was everywhere felt that so long as such proofs of iron will endurance and coolness were exhibited by British heroes, there was little chance of the despotic sons of Gaul or Teuton ever [illegible] to the entry and colonization [illegible] nation. Bell's Life.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

MURDER OF M. POINSOT.

The sensation of the moment in France and England, next to the "looting" of the Emperor's palace at Pekin, is a murder lately committed in a railway car in France. M. Poinsot, a judge in the Imperial Court on the 5th of December was returning from his estate in Campagne, and occupied a first-class car on a night train on the Strasburg railway. From Troyes where he took the train to Paris, is 100 miles. Other passengers entered the compartment at some intermediate points, but at the last station before reaching Paris it was observed that only two persons were in the compartment, but when the train reached Paris M. Poinsot was found alone, dead. His skull had been fractured and two pistol shots had pierced his body. His ticket was found torn up, and a snuff-box and neckerchief which might have been his were lying on the floor, but there was no trace whatever of the murderer. It is to be understood that the compartments in a foreign railway car hold but two persons each, and have no communication with each other. The murderer, when he escaped, must have left the train altogether, and it is observed that he closed the door after him as he did so. No pistol shots were heard, however, by the that before reaching the last station but one before Paris, she heard cries. At a place between the last two stations (at which the train only slacked its speed to throw out the mail,) or less than ten miles from Paris, a man was seen to leap from the train and scramble down the embankment; but no other trace has yet been found of this person, who was no doubt the murderer. One theory of the motive of this murder is that it was an act of vengeance for some decision given by the judge. It seems, however, that his watch and purse were carried away, that he went to the country to collect his rents, and returned with a large bag apparently well filled, though as it proved with no very valuable contents. The probabilities therefore tend to show that it was a robbery, "the first instance of robbery and murder on the iron highway." It was, in any event, a singularly bold act, as the perpetrator had not only to commit it without detection, but to make his escape in the hazardous way mentioned. It has created great excitement in Paris, and has led to what is almost a panic about the dangers of travelling in first-class railway cars. A Paris correspondent says, "I venture to say that I could to-day find in Paris thirty gentlemen who were at the storming of the Malakoff, and fought through the long day at Solferino, who would not agree to travel from here forty miles alone in first-class cars."

SEVERE SNOW STORMS.

One of the most severe snow storms experienced in Hampshire for many years past occurred on Wednesday, Dec. 19th, 1860, and extended in an easterly direction along the whole of the coast. The snow commenced to fall at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and continued without intermission until half-past four on Thursday morning. The train from Salisbury which is due at Bishopstoke at 7.10 was upwards of an hour behind time, and on arriving at Bishopstoke found that the up train from Weymouth and Southampton, after waiting for some time, had proceeded without it. A special train was then despatched with the London passengers, but on reaching the incline at Micheldever bank, about a mile and a half from Micheldever Station, the ordinary train was discovered, with a heavy goods train before it, blocked up by the snow, which at that time (nine o'clock) was between two and three feet deep. As it was impossible to move the goods train, the engine was unhooked, and cut its way through the snow to Micheldever in order to procure assistance, guards being despatched down the line with danger signals to prevent the approach of any other train. On the goods engine reaching Micheldever a telegram was sent to Basingstoke, 11 miles nearer London, and two pilot engines were promptly sent down, and a number of labourers to clear the way. In many places the snow was found to have attained a depth of nearly five feet, and as the fire-box of the leading engine became choked up every few minutes it was found requisite to dig a passage for it before any progress could be made. Ultimately, after remaining stationary for nearly six hours, the goods trucks were taken in detail to Micheldever, the services of three engines being required to drag them forward. The goods train was turned into a siding at Micheldever, and the passenger train drew up at the station at half-past one, when its half-frozen occupants were enabled to obtain refreshments at a roadside public house a short distance from the line. The train, with three engines attached to it proceeded upon its journey at 2 o'clock, but had not gone more than three miles when the fire-boxes became choked up and a further stoppage took place. From this point to Basingstoke, about eight miles, the stoppages were incessant. The snow continued to fall very heavily, and at intervals of about 100 yards the guards and labourers were compelled to cut a passage. The train arrived at Basingstoke at half-past 6, and remained there about half an hour until the mail train, which was two hours behind time, passed. The remainder of the journey was accomplished without further obstruction, and, to the astonishment of the passengers, it was found no snow whatever had fallen between Woking and London. The train, which was due at the Waterloo station at 10 on Wednesday night arrived there at 25 minutes past 7 on Thursday morning, being nine hours and a quarter behind time.

The snow was lying thick in Northumberland, especially in the hill districts, and on Wednesday night heavy showers were falling.

A letter from Edinburgh, dated Wednesday, says:—"Within the last 24 hours this district has been visited by an unusually heavy snow storm, which appears to have been experienced over a large expanse of country. On Tuesday several slight falls of snow took place here, but up to eleven o'clock p. m. scarcely two inches of deposit had been made. At that hour a very heavy rattling shower of hail, sleet, and snow took place, and by midnight the snow lay at considerable depth. In the morning the deposit without drift was at least a foot in depth. The wind was off the north-east (coming directly from the Frith of Forth) but as it was not very high, there was comparatively little drift. Accounts from East and West Lothian, and from the various parts of this country would seem to point out this district as probably the centre of the storm which has not been equalled here as weight and continuity of the snow-fall for many years. The storm was continued with brief intervals of clear weather, during the day, and the depth of the deposit may be estimated at from 18 to 20 inches. The railway trains to-day are all here an hour or two behind, and the principal [illegible] miles of Edinburgh."

PUBLIC MEETING AT THOROLD

THE MINISTRY CONDEMNED.

According to announcement, Wm Beaty Esq., addressed a public meeting in Thorold on Friday evening last, on "The present political aspect of Canada." The Town Hall was well filled on the occasion, and amongst the audience were several of the most influential inhabitants of the place. Jacob Keefer, Esq., occupied the chair. At the close of the meeting the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved,—"That in the opinion of this meeting, it is not at present desirable that the existing union of the Provinces of Canada be severed, but that the conditions of the union be so changed as to secure to Upper Canada her just rights, and representation in the Legislature proportionate to her population.

Resolved,—That in the opinion of this meeting, the present Administration have not laboured for the best interests of the country, and are unworthy of the confidence of the people of Canada."

The press and the platform are the only constitutional and legitimate means that can be employed to effect a reform in the affairs of our country. Without the one the other is comparatively ineffectual, and it is a matter of regret that, except in those instances when men occupying themselves [illegible] with the government of the province, they are so seldom prominently brought before the people. Mr Beaty, though still a young and untried man, deserves much credit for attempting to impart information on the subject to the inhabitants of his native town. We care not who the Ministerial candidate may be in Welland at the next General Election, or by whom opposed, the result of the meeting at Thorold is a pretty certain indication that the cause of the Opposition will triumph.—St. Catherines' Post.

MUTAINY ON SHIPBOARD—THE CAPTAIN'S SON MURDERED.

The clipper ship "Hussar" of New Bedford, Capt Howland, arrived last evening from Batavia and Padang, having on board twenty-four prisoners, the mutineers of the ship "Staghound," among whom is James Morris, who, in an affray on board, stabbed the second officer, a son of Capt Hussey, of the "Staghound." His wounds terminated fatally after lingering nine days in great agony. Morris also stabbed the first officer, but the injuries were slight and he recovered. The prisoner, Morris is a tow, thick seaman, about 27 years of age, sandy complexion, moustaches and imperial, intelligent and very communicative. He states that he, as well as the rest of the crew, was badly treated during the passage but always obeyed orders as given by the officers. He gives the following account of the occurrence:—The ship having a cargo of 100 coolies, it was necessary to keep a strict watch upon them, or they would rise and endeavor to take possession of the vessel. Upon this occasion the hatches being open for ventilation, the coolies took advantage of it and rose en masse, and endeavored to take possession of the ship. The crew, foremost among whom was himself, made an onslaught upon them, and after killing a number, and driving others into the sea succeeded in getting the remainder below. Subsequently Morris says he was ill treated and blamed for not making more efforts than he did at the commencement of the outbreak; and that on the occasion of the encounter he was crossing the bridge, [about three feet wide] leading from the poop to the main deck house when the second officer [Mr Hussey the deceased] called him some hard names which he took no notice of. Hussey then seized a large bucket and knocked him down. After recovering from the blow and while under great excitement, he drew his sheath knife which was at his side, and plunged it into Hussey's abdomen Hussey then ran to the cabin, but scarcely had he [Morris] left the bridge, when the first officer made an attack upon him, when he also stabbed him. The entire crew, upon hearing of the occurrence immediately refused duty, and without making any resistance, were allowed to be imprisoned They had twenty-four men who have been four months in prison.

EXTRAORDINARY OUTRAGE.—We have to record to-day one of the most daring outrages, which has perhaps ever been perpetrated in this city. A respectable lady, the sister-in-law of a professional gentleman left her brother-in-law's house in upper Bleury Street on Sunday about mid-day, and was proceeding towards town along that part of the street which borders on the property of Colonel Evans, when she was assaulted by some scoundrel, who threw her down and made the most determined attempt to ravish her. He only desisted when a servant belonging to the Convent drove up in a sleigh, upon which he at once took to flight. It is believed that the perpetrator of this audacious villainy, in a frequented part of the city and in mid day, is sufficiently identified to make his apprehension almost certain. We trust he will be adequately punished.—N. Y. Herald.

ROBBERY OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—Our Paris correspondent sends us the following account of the remarkable recovery of valuable property stolen from Queen Victoria:

"Some time ago the Paris police were informed that a robbery had been committed in one of the Royal palaces of England to the detriment of the Queen's casket, and the police here have been on the watch for the thieves. Sunday a person picked up in the Avenue des Champs Elysees. A very valuable massive gold ring with the zypher V. R., surmounted by the royal crown, all in diamonds on rubies; and the police upon examining it found it contained in its rim a miniature stereoscope, whose eye-barrels are not larger than a pin's head, and are provided with magnifying glasses which exhibit the microscopic daguerreotype likeness of Prince Albert and the Prince of Wales, as large as a visiting card. It has been returned to Her Majesty. Have you noticed how numerous robberies in palaces have of late become? The King of Belgium, the Prince Regent of Prussia, Emperor of Russia, and the Empress Eugenie, have all suffered from thieves within the last few months."

☞ The Beaverton Post says that a few days ago, Mrs Edward Barlow, Thorah, in mixing a dose of medicine, made a mistake which almost consigned her to an untimely grave. As the poor woman is blind, it was not a difficult matter to substantiate given which instead of epsom salts. This she did taking over half a tea-cup full of an irritant poison. She suffered much, but under the care of Dr Dean is likely to recover.

☞ A large number of the citizens of Quebec, entertaining the belief that the time has come when, as a matter of paramount necessity, a thorough and searching enquiry should be made into the manner in which the municipal elections and civic affairs generally in that city are conducted, prayed by requisition the Mayor, Mr Langevin, to call a public meeting. THE SOUTHERN SECESSION.

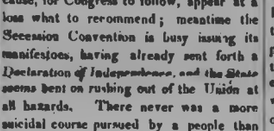
What at first appeared only the off-shoot of a huff at a political defeat is in reality assuming the dimensions of a deep-seated determination to secede. South Carolina will earn for itself the unenviable, or unenviable, notoriety of initiating the movement for the first time in the history of the United States of a disruption of the Federal union. It is, in fact, a movement without a parallel in the history of nations, as far as we know, and certainly one wholly unwarranted by the circumstances which ostensibly provoked it. The election of Abe Lincoln was as constitutional an act as was the election of James Buchanan four years ago, and no attempt has ever been made by the South to prove otherwise. Precisely the same causes of discontent existed in 1856 as in 1860, and the only cause of dissatisfaction expressed by the South is that the majority elected as President, for the first time in 30 years, a man whose known views are adverse to the institution of slavery. There is no doubt that the South has assisted materially to inaugurate the Republican reign of politicians, by its recent intolerant conduct to innocent northern men in its borders. Such arbitrary conduct, worthy only of the worst European despots, has tended to awaken northern apathy, and led to the present triumph of freedom. The present state of things is beginning to engage the serious attention of the world, and people of the United States in particular, and their wise men are at a loss what to do. Some are for prompt measures to put down the treason—for it is nothing else—some are for giving greater concessions so as to conciliate. The President will not act with the former; the Committee of 33, appointed to examine into this movement and report to Congress its opinion as to the cause, for Congress to follow, appear at a loss what to recommend; meantime the Secession Convention is busy issuing its manifestoes, having already sent forth a Declaration of Independence, and the State seems bent on rushing out of the Union at all hazards. There never was a more suicidal course pursued by a people than that now attempted by South Carolina. If the "peculiar institution" is unsafe in the Union, it will be ten times more so out of it. If the credit of the South is low in the Union by its previous acts of repudiation, where will it be out of it? The idea of a separate federation of Southern States is most absurd. The nerdful is not in itself to carry on a government, and as to borrowing it is out of the question; and if no other obstacle stood in the way of a separate federation, the want of money would in itself form a sufficient barrier to their scheme being successful. The chief cause of discontent is that the North does not and will not favor slavery—that it is determined to surround its present locality by Free States, and by thus hemming in the institution it is looked upon as tantamount to a determination to destroy slavery altogether. The unsatisfactory manner in which the Fugitive Slave Law is carried out in the Free States is looked upon as an abnegation by the North of the law altogether. The ravings of the abolitionists, and the well-known proclivities of the Republican party in reference to slavery, have infuriated the Southern mind, now that that party are elevated to administer the government for the next four years. The cry "To your tents, O, Israel," has been sounded, and the cotton States are probably only waiting the results of the success of South Carolina to secede with her from a Union in which they fancy they have no longer any inheritance. Another cause of complaint, which has loud and long been made against the North, is the existing protective tariff, which operates greatly against Southern interests, but benefits vastly the Northern States. Both causes touch the Southerners in a pecuniary way, and it is said you cannot touch a man in a more tender point than in his pocket.

Since writing the above, we have learned by last advices from Washington that the President has abandoned the laissez-aller principles advocated in his annual Message, and has positively asserted his determination to execute the laws, and to defend the property of the United States with all the power at his disposal, refused to withdraw the Federal troops from Charleston, and received the Commissioners sent from South Carolina only as distinguished visitors from one of the States of the Union. On the 3rd instant, it is said that he returned the last communication from them unopened, and has signed his declaration not to receive anything more from them. They left at once for Charleston, and carried with them the impression that the abrupt termination of negotiations by the President was insulting to them—that his conduct amounted to a declaration of war against South Carolina. Major Anderson at Fort Sumpter, with a handful of men, is boasted, and the winnowers in the Senate as well as in Congress are at a loss what to do to prevent the fearful calamity of civil war, now so imminent. We may be prepared to hear of any amount of actual hostilities taking place. Vessels of war have been ordered South. Fears are entertained for the safety of the Federal capital, as rumors are rife of a raid upon it; troops are ordered [illegible]



THE MAYORALTY ELECTION.

The election is over and Chas. Perry, Esq., is Mayor elect for 1861. Considering the fact that all the powers of the Railroad agents, of the Conger-Burnham faction, and the Corruptionists generally to elect Mr. White, our victory is a great one, and the Town is safe for one year more from the rule of dishonest, designing men.—Even the $500 forfeiture of salary was no inducement to the rate-payers, and they indignantly spurned the "free service" trickster. The victory is a double one; we are scarcely more rejoiced at the election of Mr Perry than that Mr O'Beirne, the man who not longer ago than Friday last was stigmatized by Mr. White as not having "brains enough for the management of the business of a petty Attorney and Conveyancer," and who set down as not having the "shadow of a chance" of election, polled more votes than the vaunting egotist. In fact a better result could not have been wished; how low must the Corruptionist clique have sunk in the eyes of the people when Elias Burnham, a lawyer and scholar of no mean reputation, was rejected, and James Ryan, comparatively an illiterate man, elected instead. Toole only ran in on the strength of his constituents for the Township, in the North Ward, and Mr. Morrow was rejected in the East. We need say no more at present; we can afford to be generous to our enemies and will deal mercifully with them.

ASHBURNHAM ELECTION.

The following are the Councillors elect for the village of Ashburnham:

Messrs. R D Rogers; F Armstrong; H Bennett; H Calcutt; J Ludgate.

☞ The friends of the late principal of our Union School will be glad to learn that he has received the head-mastership of the Vienna, C. W., Grammar School.—We wish him success.

☞ The last Review, evidently actuated by feelings of spite and revenge, made an attack on J. T. Heathers, J. P., trumping up a charge of abuse of magistrat authority, and twitting Mr. Heathers on his deficient education. We know nothing of the alleged abuse of office, but for downright ignorance and arbitrariness the Review might have found a subject nearer home for its jest in a certain J. P., who disgraces the bench of our Quarter Sessions frequently, bringing the Court into contempt.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY CONVENTION OF C. W.—Two Sermons in behalf of the above will be preached by Rev. H. Lloyd of Whitby, on Sabbath next, in the Baptist Chapel, Peterborough. The annual Missionary Meeting will be held in the same place on Tuesday next, at 6½ p. m. Several distinguished speakers are expected to address the meeting. The Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the above Convention will be held in the said Chapel on Wednesday, Jan. 16. Rev. T. L. Davidson, M. A., will preach the Quarterly Sermon at 7½ p. m.

THE ORANGEMEN AND THE MINISTRY.

At a meeting of the Orangemen of Kingston, held in that City on Friday last, at which every Lodge but one was represented by its master, the following resolutions were passed:—

1. Resolved,—That the unsatisfactory issue of the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Central Canada, held at Brockville, on the 30th October last, has rendered it necessary for the Orangemen of Kingston and County of Frontenac to adopt the alternative of giving expression to their opinions on the conduct of the Canadian Government during the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, by means of mass meetings.

Therefore, we, the Orangemen of Kingston and surrounding neighborhood, do declare that the present Ministry, by countenancing and permitting the tyrannical and Puseyite Duke of Newcastle (who has unsheathed the sword of persecution against our brethren in Ireland) to carry out the same policy here, have forfeited all claim to the confidence of the Orange body.

FIRE.—The bake-house and shed belonging to Mr Heathorn, in the rear of his two-story building on George street, was destroyed by fire on Monday night last.—Loss $600; no insurance. The bakery was used by Mr. A. Porter, who, it is said, sells bread cheaper than any other baker in Town, and by many this fact is coupled with the burning of the building.

SUPERIOR TEAS.—We have to thank Mr. John McDonnell, Grocer, for a New Year's gift of several samples of his teas. We also pronounce such a superior article. Mr McDonnell is a good judge of human nature as well as of teas, and knows that to have a fair test of his articles and a candid opinion on them, he must submit them to editorial inspection.

THE ASPHODEL ELECTION.

(To the Editor of the Examiner.)

DEAR SIR,

Our Municipal Elections have passed off very quietly. The Councillors of last year, with the exception of one [Timothy Coughlin, Esq.] have been re-elected, and he seeing that discretion is the better part of valour, resigned in favor of Jas Fowler, Esq., not that he despaired of being elected as much as he was afraid of getting whipped. The present Councillors elect are P M. Grover, Esq; Edward Patterson, Esq; T J Foley, Esq; F Birdsall, Esq and Jas Fowler, Esq. You may perceive that from the above list of names there is not one of the Councillors of 1860 elected. They made a rod to whip themselves and the rate-payers made good use of it.

I remain, Sir,
Yours very truly,
A RATEPAYER.

Norwood, January 8th, 1860.

On New Year's Day, two men named Robert Ford and Thomas Laid were at work at Carbonneville, near Rochester, in a plaster pit, 40 feet below the surface of the earth, and in a gallery about 60 feet from the bottom of the vertical shaft, when the roofs caved in, burying them alive. The accident was discovered by the people in the neighborhood, and a large number assembled [illegible]

THE DUMMER DIFFICULTY.

DECISION OF THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

As our election difficulty of last year in the Fourth Ward is now at a close, I feel once more justified in calling the attention of your readers to the matter. They will still remember that the difficulty arose from the fact of the Clerk, G. A. Hill, refusing to administer the declaration of qualification and office to me as the duly elected Councillor though I was returned as such by the Returning Officer, but made out declarations for the defeated candidate, G. Payne. They will also remember that for thus refusing to do his duty he was convicted by a bench of magistrates in Dummer and fined $20 and costs, and the electors determined to test his conduct further in the Courts, so as to give me, their rightful representative, my seat in the Council. Accordingly an application was made for a mandamus from the Court of Common Pleas to command the Clerk to do his duty. In this our first application we failed then for, the Court refusing to issue a peremptory mandamus, yet decided that I was the duly elected Councillor for the Ward, and I was recommended to sign my declarations before a Justice of the Peace and present myself to the Council as the true Councillor, requiring the Clerk to receive and file my papers, and if he should refuse I might then apply for the mandamus.

This was all complied with on my part, and yet strange to say the Clerk obstinately refused. Your readers will also remember the false statements in the Clerk's letter printed in your columns in June last, when he said the Judges of the Common Pleas had refused to grant a mandamus and had confirmed all the Clerk had done in the matter and also had confirmed George Payne in his seat, and he concluded by asking the world with all the impudence and sang froid of a cut-throat if the two J. P.'s who punished him for doing no wrong, for breaking no law, should not be made a public example of. This statement well became our prodigy of a Clerk who is notorious for his falsities and false reasonings.

I was therefore compelled to make a second application for a mandamus which would have been argued in August last had not the anxiety of the Clerk to keep me out of the Council for the year caused him to move for a postponement until the November term, under the pretence of not having time to prepare his defence sooner. The subject was therefore brought before the Judges in November and a judgment given absolute for a mandamus to issue against the Clerk.

This writ was served on the Clerk on the second day of January of the present year; he was by this time so far brought to his senses as to comply and receive my papers and acknowledge me as the true Councillor, so that I have yet the hope of sitting once with my quality and solicit friend the Clerk in the old Council, on the third Monday of this month.

In conclusion I would say that this difficulty has had one good effect: that of opening the eyes of our rate-payers to the fact that we have been at the tender mercies of a set of men as Councillors, led by their unerring star G. A. Hill, who are ever ready to set aside all municipal law whenever it suits their selfish and designing interests. The day of retribution, however, will come. Finally, Mr. Editor, I tender to you my grateful thanks for the impartiality of your columns, and ask Mr. Hill if he, in his last letter, was not guilty of great folly in thus "balooing before he got out of the woods."

W. MANLEY.

Dummer, Jan. 4, 1860.

NARROW ESCAPE.

On Sabbath the 2nd of December, there occurred one of the most narrow escapes from a terrible death in the village of Weverburgh.

Daniel O'Sullivan was crossing over from his residence on the east side of the Trent, opposite the village about 2 o'clock in the morning, and not finding his canoe, which had been carried away, he took a small raft of boards and was paddling himself over. He soon came in contact with the anchor ice which drove him down to a bay a quarter of a mile lower down, where the ice was a little solid, and his raft became stationary, and as the floating ice from above kept accumulating around him it caused the raft to separate a little but soon froze solid The accumulation of ice kept the raft under water, and he was soon up to his knees in water, when its surface became congealed into a cake of ice. He retained his upright condition and kept calling for help.—The neighbors soon heard the shore. They tried to get to him in boats, and after 7 hours incessant labor in chopping through the ice, at last succeeded in rescuing the sufferer who had remained eight long hours in his fearful position. He was frozen so fast that he had to be chopped out. After chafing his limbs and giving him some cordials, he was in an hour able to go about, and has not since been incommoded in any way from any effects of his long exposure. —Cobourg Sun.

TAKING THE CENSUS.

Monday, the 15th day of January, is the day appointed for taking the Census of this Province. Extensive arrangements have been made to have the work accurately and efficiently done. The commissioners are enjoined to appoint intelligent, temperate and respectable persons enumerators, and are then called upon to perform their duty with "fidelity and zeal." "Be pleased to remember that upon the result of your labors will depend the truthfulness of the representation, not only of the population but of the material resources and social condition of your district, and it is the hope and expectation of this Department that you will execute your important trust with fidelity and zeal." The Hamilton Spectator remarks that there can be little fear of the census being inaccurately taken under the circumstances, for it is evident that Government are doing everything that can possibly be done to have the numbering of the people correct. The public should also bear in mind that it is an offence punishable by fine, for any party to give false information in connection with the taking of the Census, or refusing to answer an enumerator's enquiries.

LATEST from EUROPE.

BY THE "AUSTRALASIAN."

New York, Jan. 3.

The steamship Australasian arrived this morning, bringing English advices from Queenstown to the 22rd ult.

Liverpool.—Breadstuffs closed firm with an upward tendency. Corn a shade dearer; 39s for mixed and yellow. Provisions unchanged.

London, Saturday evening.—Consols closed at 92¼ a 92⅞ on account ex div.

The steamship Arago arrived at Southampton on Friday evening.

The Australasian brings nearly a million in specie.

Paris, Saturday.—A despatch from Baron Gros to the Emperor Napoleon confirms the announcement of peace with China, the ultimatum of Shanghai being accepted and ratifications exchanged.—France receives 60,000,000f. of indemnity 4,000,000 being paid down. The emigration of Coolies is permitted, and the churches, cemeteries, &c., formerly belonging to the Christians throughout the empire, are to be restored to them.

A Te Deum was sung in the cathedral at Pekin on the occasion of the restoration of the Cross to the summit of that edifice.

It appears from Gen. De Montauban, the French Minister of War, that the Emperor's palace was not sacked by the French army as previously reported. On the contrary, nothing was touched until the arrival of the English, when a division of spoils was made under commissioners from both armies.

Political fermentations continue in Hungary.

Count Teleki, the Hungarian refugee, had been arrested in Dresden with a false passport, and delivered up to Austria.

The Paris Monitour says that a portion of the French army at Pekin was to be despatched to Cochin China, for the purpose of attacking the city of Hue, the Emperor's capital and residence.

ENGLAND.

A terrible explosion occurred at Hatton on the 20th. Twenty miners were killed.

There had been a severe snow storm in various parts of England, blocking up railroads at Northumberland. The snow was preceded by violent thunder. The same phenomenon occurred at the Isle of Wight. At the latter place the lightning did much damage—the tower of Kirwie church being demolished, and a woman struck dead in the streets.

SOUTHERN INTELLIGENCE.

COMBINATION TO SEIZE THE GOVERNMENT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.

Intelligence was received last night that Fort Sumpter is now besieged; that all Major Anderson's communications are cut off; that Fort Moultrie has been completely repaired, and the guns remounted, and that everything is in readiness to open a fire on Major Anderson. New batteries are being erected around him by the secessionists, and every day the danger and difficulties of reinforcing him are increased. His frequent applications for reinforcements, and even the tears and prayers of his wife, having failed to move the President, he has determined never again to renew his request, but will perish if he must in the Fort. His men have bound themselves with an oath to stand and perish with him.

It is beyond a doubt that a combination is forming to take forcible possession of the Government at Washington, on or before the 4th of March, but the precise time is not yet determined.

The above is from sources which leaves no doubt of its reliability.

Gentlemen censure the apparent inactivity of the President, contending that by availing himself of the counsels and services of Lieut. General Scott, all possibility of danger could be averted.

BALTIMORE, Jan'y 4.

The following special despatch to the American has been received:—

Charleston, Jan. 4.—Governor Pickens has divided the duties of the Executive Administration of South Carolina among his Council thus:—he appoints A. S. McGrath Secretary of State, to regulate intercourse with other States and Foreign Powers, make treaties, regulate commerce, and appoint Consuls; D. F. Jamison, Secretary of War; C. G. Memminger, Secretary of Treasury; W H Harllie to regulate the Postal Department and Light Houses; A. C. Garlington, Secretary of the Interior, to attend to local matters, including the Militia and Coast Police.

CHARLESTON, January 4.

We learn from a gentleman who arrived here this morning from Savannah, that the forts are in the possession of the Georgia State troops. They are occupied by 150 men. An armourer, with thirty men, is engaged in cleaning the guns to make them serviceable. The State of Georgia has also taken possession of the United States revenue cutter on that station.

SAVANNAH, January 4.

Fort Pulaski was yesterday taken possession of by the volunteers, by order of Governor Brown. It is reported that the revenue cutter Dobbin has been taken possession of, but Governor Brown has issued orders for her return to the Government. It is generally believed that the secession ticket has carried the State.

NORFOLK, January 4.

The United States sloop of war Brooklyn is coaling and taking on stores, and getting ready for a cruise. It is rumoured that she is destined for Charleston. Great excitement was created yesterday, in consequence of a report that four companies from Fortress Monroe had been ordered to Charleston. Lieut J. H. North tendered his resignation to-day.

PHILADELPHIA, January 4.

A town meeting is called for Saturday, to sustain Anderson and support the efforts of the Government to reinforce him.

DESTITUTION IN LONDON.

Owing to the continued severity of the weather, much destitution at the present period exists in various localities of the West-end, Spitalfields, &c., one of the effects of which is that the "soup kitchens" in the metropolis are thronged with applicants for the fare they afford. At the "kitchen" in Euston-road, St. Pancras, which has for its patrons Lord Portman, the Rev. T. Dale, M. A., the late vicar, and several of the opulent inhabitants of St Pancras, during the last fortnight nearly eight thousand quarts of pea soup, about as many small loaves, besides several hundreds of pounds of rice, have been distributed to the poor. In Spitalfields, which adjoins Bethnal-green, there is also a soup kitchen, which is under the patronage of Mr. Hanbury, of the firm of Truman, Hanbury & Co., the clergy, and other influential inhabitants of those parishes, and which has given an equal amount of relief to the poor of that locality.—London Advertiser.

POPULATION OF THE WORLD.

The population of the world is increasing; and if we give to the term Christian the widest latitude, it is by no means certain that the number of Pagans in the world is not now as great as it ever was. Twenty years ago our highest estimate of the population of the globe was about 800,000,000. It is now admitted by all to be not less than ten, and by those who are the best informed, to be at least twelve hundred millions. This change of figures is due in part to a more accurate knowledge of the geography of the world; but there has been a great increase in many countries, and no doubt, in the aggregate, a decided advance in the population of the globe.—From the best and latest sources of information we derive the following estimate:—

America	63,000,000
Europe	265,000,000
Africa	115,000,000
Asia	700,000,000
Japan	35,000,000
Oceania	22,000,000
	1,200,000,000

Christian Protestants 85,000,000
R. Catholics, 180,000,000
Greeks... 68,000,000
Other sects 7,000,000

AFRAID OF SNAKES.

There is the greatest coward about snakes up in Calhoun, that lives in America. He came from the East last spring and bought a farm, and for the first six weeks in the country he hardly slept two hours each night. He had a fine patch of oats on his farm but he was afraid to cradle it. One day he concluded he'd take a look to see if there were many snakes in the patch; so he got his old horse, and after loading him through the gap, and laying up the fence to keep the hogs out, he took an old scythe south in his hand to fight with in case of an attack, mounted the horse, and struck out into the oats, holding up both legs as high as possible. He had'nt got far when he saw a whaling big snake slipping along the oats after him. Away he went right around the oat patch, and away went the snake around after him; some times on the one side and sometimes on the other; sometimes behind and sometimes before. He couldn't get out of the lot because the fence was up and the snake kept pace with him, in consequence there was no chance but to urge the old horse to keep out of its way. He went it that way till every stalk of his oats was trampled down, and the horse just about dead, when he discovered that he'd been running from the shadow of his scythe snath.

OIL FOR LEATHER.

Common castor-oil, so experience and a knowledge of its composition dictate, is the best possible application of the fatty character for leather, shoes, harness, etc. It has two prime qualities of superiority over animal fats, in that, first, it keeps the leather pliable, not after long use, drying the fibre, or making it brittle or liable to crack; and secondly, it contains enough glutinous matter to render it viscid, filling the pores, and in a degree water-proofing the leather to which it is applied. Besides, the castor-bean be easily raised; and the oil in the quantity is not expensive.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—THE LAST RESOURCE.—Dysentery.—There is but one unfailing remedy for this class of inflamatory disorders, after all other remedies have failed—Holloway's Morphine and Calomel are indiscriminately prescribed according to the discretion of the attending physician: these may give a temporary alleviation, but they eventually irritate the bowels without removing the source—on the contrary Holloway's Pills soothe the bowels by evacuating the acrid matter which inflames them, clears the stomach of all exciting humors, and restores its normal tone and vigor. Read the Advertisement.

☞ During the conflagration of Canton' caused by the bombardment of the British' the extensive medical warehouse of our countryman, Dr J. C. AYER of Lowell, (the depot of his Cherry Pectoral and Cathartic Pills, for China,) was totally destroyed. He now makes a demand upon our government for indemnity for the loss of his property, and hence will grow another nut to crack with our elder brother Johnny. Stick to it Doctor; and if our government maintains our rights wherever your Pills are sold, we shall only be superotected on tracts that are very barren.—Reformer, Trenton, N. J.

Mr Gough states that he is not so rich as many people suppose. His taxes only amount to $25. He also says that when he commenced lecturing, an agreement was made between himself and his wife that one tenth of all his earnings should be given to charitable purposes. We see it stated the when lecturing in Chicago, Ill., a few days ago, he suggested that contributions in money should also be sent to the destitute in Kansas from that city, and that he would put his name down for $50, either in the beginning, in the middle, or at the end of a list for that purpose.

WHAT IS BEST TO BE DONE?—If you are suffering from Rheumatism, Lame Back, Sprains, Strains or Bruises, Sick Head Ache, Tooth Ache, Cholic, Bowel Complaints, Frost Bites, Burns, &c., decidedly the best thing to get in a bottle of the Canadian Pain Destroyer. The cost is trifling and its effects certain. It is a never failing remedy, and no family should be without it.

☞ See advertisement.

LOUIS NAPOLEON'S COAT.—Louis Napoleon has come out with a half military blue frock coat. All Paris have them, and they'll be the fare here next summer; but in the meantime, if you are troubled with a cold, cough, sore throat or hoarseness, try a few of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers, 25 cents a box, at all druggists.

CHALLENGE!

To all whom it may Concern.—It is a noted fact that all Worm Medicine fails into insignificance compared with McKenzie's Dead Shot Worm Candy[illegible]. It far surpasses the expectations of every one. It gives new life and vigor to the fretful, emaciated and sickly child.—It not only eradicates every species of worms, but it cleanses the whole system from all impurities. The extensive sale of this Worm Candy is sufficient proof of its efficacy. There are stores of Worm Medicines in Canada, yet, it has been ascertained, on reliable information, that the sale of the Dead Shot Worm Candy-stick is one-third more than all the others combined. It is sold by every dealer in medicines for 15 cents; four packages for half-a-dollar.—See advertisement in another column.

ESSAY ON AGRICULTURE.

BY GEORGE WASHINGTON, OF VIRGINIA, U. S. A.

"And the Lord God took the man and put him in the garden to dress it and to keep it."

The profession of agriculture is the first employment in the world. It is co-eval with the human race, the first man in the world was a tiller of the soil, and from the days of Adam to the present time mankind, from the highest to the lowest, have depended on the art for their very subsistence; it is also of infinitely more consequence to the human race than any other profession. Suppose any one of the various departments of industry, art and science, in which mankind are engaged, or even the whole of them, were to be abandoned, and mankind although deprived of many of the luxuries, and possibly some of the blessings of life would still only be thrown backward a few centuries in advancement; but, suppose the husbandman to suspend operations but for a single season, and cease for one short year to extract from the soil by his industry and skill the fruits which by proper management nature yields to him and we have only to contemplate the consequences to realize the value of the farmer's calling. It is of the greatest importance then, that a pursuit in which the whole of mankind are so immensely interested, should be prosecuted to the very best advantage and that its followers should bring to their aid that amount of energy and skill which the magnitude of the interests demand. And yet the fact is undeniable that many members of what are called the learned professions look down on the tillers of the soil as being of an inferior class, and the occupation of the farmer as one which requires neither education nor enlightened judgment. And it must be admitted that too many farmers are content to assume that position which an erroneous opinion has assigned them, and to render what ought to be an exhilarated and honorable profession, a life of comfortless toil and drudgery; this is a state of things that should not exist. There can be no good reason why the agricultural class should not be as well educated and as refined as any other class, since nature has endowed them with the intellect equal to any other, and no occupation affords better facilities for acquiring knowledge, cultivating the taste, or refining the mind, I mean not the ball-room or the court, that intimate acquaintance with the laws of fashion by which too many hide the real deficiencies of the mind. I mean that knowledge which elevates its possessor in the scale of moral being, by which he commands the respect of the great and the good, and which causes his memory to be held in honoured remembrance after his body has been numbered with the dead.

Strongly impressed with the correctness of these views and the importance of the agriculturist occupying that position which is his inherent right, and believing that it is incumbent on every individual who cultivates the soil to contribute with all his power towards effecting that end. I will endeavour to write a brief treatise on the theory and practice of Canadian agriculture, and I ask the reader to accompany me in a spirit of candor and forbearance, pledging myself that although the following remarks may not be characterized by learning or ability, yet the facts and conclusions there given shall be those arrived at after mature investigation, and that the arguments and theories advanced shall be the result of experience and observation, and the aim and object of the whole, the advancement of Canadian agriculture, and the intellectual and social elevation of the Canadian farmer.

I purpose to take up the different departments of farming operations separately, commencing with those which seem of most importance, without regard to the season of the year at which they occur; treating each one in as plain and practicable a manner as I am capable of, and as briefly as the subject will admit of.

POPULATION OF THE WORLD.

The population of the world is increasing and if we give to the term Christian the widest latitude, it is by no means certain that the number of Pagans in the world is not now as great as it ever was. Twenty years ago our highest estimate of the population of the globe was about 800,000,000. It is now admitted by all to be not less than ten, and by those who are the best informed, to be at least twelve hundred millions. This change of figures is due in part to a more accurate knowledge of the geography of the world; but there has been a great increase in many countries, and no doubt, in the aggregate, a decided advance in the population of the globe.—From the best and latest sources of information we derive the following estimate:—

America	63,000,000
Europe	265,000,000
Africa	115,000,000
Asia	700,000,000
Japan	35,000,000
Oceania	22,000,000
	1,200,000,000
Christian Protestants	85,000,000
R. Catholics,	180,000,000
Greeks	60,000,000
Other sects	7,000,000
	340,000,000

OIL FOR LEATHER.

Common castor-oil, so experience and a knowledge of its composition dictate, is the least possible application of the fatty character for leather, shoes, harness, etc. It has two prime qualities of superiority over animal fats, in that, first, it keeps the leather pliable, not after long use, drying the fibre, or making it brittle or liable to crack; and secondly, it contains enough glutinous matter to render it viscid, filling the pores, and in a degree water-proofing the leather to which it is applied. Besides, the castor-bean be easily raised; and the oil in the quantity is not expensive.

YEAR

AND UPWARDS SAVED to the Farmers by Aldus Mowry's

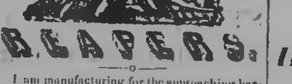
CHOPGRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without sifting or adjusting the Machine.

Patented.

All orders directed to "A. Mowry, Arthur, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.



REAPERS.

I am manufacturing for the approaching harvest, and invite those who contemplate purchasing, to inspect my work and materials before giving orders elsewhere. I feel confident that for lightness of draught, the amount of grain they are capable of cutting, and their durability they cannot be surpassed if equalled, by any other Machine in the Province.

The [illegible] was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

Peterboro', Dec. 12, 1860 50

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks; nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously developed, according to the general disorder or unhealthy condition of the system, and the variety of influences, hereditary or otherwise, which have combined to render the blood impure and corrupt. Thus, in one person, a scrofulous humor may burst forth on the surface, in boils, pimples, blotches, or eruptions of the skin; in another, it may fasten upon the lungs, and show itself in pulmonary consumption; in a third, it may develop itself in some one of the forms of female complaint, to which the system is liable; in a fourth, it may seize upon the bowels, the liver, the kidneys, the brain, and, indeed, on all the organs, and from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must remove the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as Erysipelas and Skin Diseases, St. Anthony's Fire, Ringworm, or Tetterworm, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils and Sores, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Rheumatism, Syphilitic and Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Debility, and, indeed, all Complaints arising from Vitiated or Impure Blood. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so compounded that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy influences. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and efficient.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their virtues and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disorder of Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or derangement of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness, and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, for have been restored to health and even comparative vigorous of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of the kind is established, and the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior preparations are offered to the community have failed and fallen into disuse, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures that [illegible] and will be remembered.

Health and its Pleasures,

OR

DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES:

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be unstable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits or the better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally addicted to the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sudden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. Those organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whose failure was a natural consequence; a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back as hot as can be. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this confidence will be fulfilled, when it has been proved by experiment in many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINT, DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS, and all DISORDERS OF THE URINARY ORGANS.

Combining, as it does, the most active and efficient anti-bilious, purgative and tonic remedies, this Sarsaparilla will be found a thorough and searching purifier of the blood, and will expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By its timely use, hundreds of these scorbutic affections, which else would afflict us, may be prevented. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
PLEASANTLY situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the Scotch Merchants of both Provinces) become a great favorite, that is is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now combines many improvements and convenances heretofore unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal superintendence of the concern, THE ALBION may be kept of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half House in Canada.

Poetry.

THE OLD HOLLY TREE.

Oh! the old Holly Tree,
Is a beautiful sight,
With its dark glossy leaves
And its berries so bright;
It is gay in the winter
And green in the spring,
And the old Holly Tree
Is a beautiful thing.

It gladdens the cottage,
It gladdens the hall—
For the gay Holly Tree
Is beloved by all;
It shadows the altar
It hallows the hearth,
An emblem of sacred
And innocent mirth.

Spring blossoms are lovely,
And summer flowers gay;
But the chill winds will wither
And chase them away;
But the rude blasts of Autumn
And winter may rave
Ye will found the Holly,
The Holly so brave!

Though old English pastimes
Now no longer are seen,
And have passed away
As if they never had been—
Though no more the wassail
Nor intellects we see,
Yet we still have the Holly,
The old Holly tree.

A Chinaman's Ball.

Singapore, Feb. 21st, 1860.

Such of your readers as have visited the Golden Chersonese, with the pretty and thriving little island situated at its southern extremity, must have observed with some curiosity the confluence on that spot of a hundred different streams of population. From the west and from the east, from the south and from the north, strangers are perpetually arriving in search of health, pleasure or profit. Chief among these immigrants are the natives of the Celestial Empire; who, allured by rapees [although an emigrant from China makes an outlaw of himself], would at any time of the day or night, undertake the circumnavigation of the globe. At Singapore they have long formed the most active and important class of inhabitants. Arriving frequently with an empty purse, they apply themselves fearlessly and without the least fastidiousness to any kind of labor that presents itself.—They live sparely, lie on boards, and display an example of economy which in Western Europe would inspire even misers with despair. The consequence of all this is, that in some cases they amass large fortunes, and either return to China, or remain where they are already comfortable resolving for the remainder of their days to feast on the richest of dogs.

Yet, though these hardy adventurers abound not only here in Singapore, but in every other part of the East, few things appear to be less understood than their real habits and character. Sometimes, one finds them represented as a peaceful and timid, but industrious people, with little of the spirit of enterprise, and no feeling of independence. Elsewhere they are regarded as fierce, turbulent, intractable; addicted to material indulgences; faithless, cruel, and seldom touched with sympathy for other men.

There are certainly some contradictions in the character of the Chinese, which will supply colour to either of these sketches. Vain they certainly are of being, according to their own theory, the only nation that is gifted with two eyes. At the same time, they often condescend to use, in a most servile way, the eyes of Europeans. Until the present time, however, they would scarcely be induced at competition to indulge in balls and routs, to enliven their cheerless families with social colloquies with ladies, or to give champagne suppers. At length, however, even in this respect the time has come when the effect of Confucius has proved too weak to resist the demoralizing impetus of example. Civilization, alcohol and dances among the principles of Buddhism. Instead of approaching through gates the joys of Nibban, or absolute quietude, the men of long tails and sneaking physiognomy have entered with a terrible energy into the habits of Western life. Gin, late hours, dueling, smoking, and rich collations liberally sprinkled with champagne.

And Kim Seng, a merchant well known as an Antagonist on the Rialto of Singapore, conceived a few weeks ago the intrepid design of giving the first Chinese ball ever beheld in this part of the world. Having recently created a specious Godown, or cottage, chandeliers and gas-burners, he resolved to confer on it this additional ornament, which, he, very sagaciously imagined, would confer on it a European probability, and thus in organizing the proclamation of the entertainment, in labouring the invitations, and in the general superintendence of refreshments for his guests. Numerous invitations were issued to the principal merchants and shopkeepers in the place, and I am positively envious and chagrin in stating generally that the guests included Englishmen, Frenchmen, Dutchmen, Scandinavians, Germans, Portuguese, Spaniards, Jews, Armenians, Parsees, Malays, Chinese, Bengalees, Javanese, Bugis, Siamese, Cochin Chinese, Chinese, Tamils, Telingas, Cingalese, Arabs, Boughese, Caffres, Tahitians, Hindoos from Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Kedah, Penang, Malacca, Singapore, Java, Borneo, Celebes, and Manilla. Chinese, Siamese, Peruvian, Apia, Javanese, Jews, Parsees, Chinese, and half-castes.

I considered myself extremely fortunate to have arrived just in time to be present at this entertainment. I had of course abandoned myself to the prejudices of my own race, and therefore, on being presented to the master of the house, with his long pig-tail, dark skin, and Mongolian eyes, it was with difficulty that I kept my mirth within reasonable bounds. I had been introduced under the most favorable auspices, and had myself gone at some, both with the Governor and Colonial Secretary. I was therefore in a position to command a good view of the company, and to observe the manners and customs of the Celestials. The room was a large one, and was tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens. Round the walls were ranged chairs, and in the centre of the room was a table covered with refreshments. Here and there were placed small tables, at which were seated parties playing cards. Dancing was the principal amusement of the evening, and the room was crowded with dancers, glancing hither and thither beneath the glitter of the chandeliers.

The harmony of dance and music was, however, presently disturbed by an unwise Frenchman [a rare creature], who suddenly discovering that he had lost his partner, plunged about the room in search of her, and found her actively pointing her toes at a young English lieutenant of gigantic stature. Jacques Bonhomme, being small, had some trouble to strike his round shiny face; the rival with much courtesy requested him to walk down-stairs, and promised a sufficient explanation when the dance was over. Jacques remained upstairs, wandering about the room like a wolf in a cage. A duel impended, and the Asiatics very much enjoyed the prospect of this unexpected addition to their evening's entertainment. Somebody, however, procured the intervention of police, and in a corner of a ball-room there took place the episode of arrest, bail, and those other details preliminary to civil action against Jacques Bonhomme for assault and battery.

Having shared several dances with my young Asiatic Netherlander, I went found myself opposite a Spanish lady, from Manilla, who couched between the figures, and spoke very bad English. This, however, she declared to me was her favorite language, though she knew both Malay and French; I was therefore bound, in politeness, to conceal my ignorance so to the import of about two words in every three with which she favored me.

The cluster of faces peering out from between the pillars was now and then lighted up with laughter, as odd groups of dancers whirled past; even the dancers themselves often found it impossible to preserve their gravity. Some little awkwardness, moreover, was occasionally displayed by the strangely united couples. For example, a young lady from Calcutta, dressed after the most elaborate fashion of the city of palaces, got fearfully entangled in a schottische with a Chinese Mandarin whose large, jet-black tail descended considerably below his waist. As he hopped and frisked, the tail flew about in the most dangerous way. No doubt could be entertained, however, that the gentleman had been taking lessons for a fortnight or three weeks, because he really went through the business of the dance very respectably.—At length, however, as ill-luck would have it, one of his red slippers came off. A burst of laughter, which it was impossible to restrain shook the fat sides of the host at this disaster, while the unhappy Mogul-Celt Rao quitted his partner, and rushed, with his long tail like a comet, to regain the shoe—for to be shoeless is to be disgraced in Celestial eyes.

At another time, and in another part of the room, the tails of two of the Celestials, as they passed one another, back to back, became tangled; perhaps by the string which tied them. While the gentlemen butted forward after the manner of rams, to dissolve their involuntary partnership, their shoes pattered on the floor each others' heels, and twirled on in the walls without them.

Becoming by degrees a little tired, I slipped behind the pillars for rest. Here I observed half little tables in front of the windows, on which several Celestials reclined at full length, smoking opium.

To describe fully the supper which followed, I ought to have studied for three years under some Parisian gastronome. It was a chaos of delights, each more tempting than the other. All the dishes of the Indian Archipelago, of India, China, and the West—some in their natural state, others artistically metamorphosed—were piled around us. There were birds' nest soup, poppy repast, pillaw of kangaroo, tails, fish of all kinds, and poultry in profusion. And then for the wines—all the wines that France, Germany, and Hungary could produce, spirits of the basest, and champagne—which, since we had come to Asia, we had learned to consider the only wine worthy of the name. Whole, ay, were pungent, quivering, delicious stews, of mince meat, from I know not where, stole into the mouth. Fat were the birds which, hung by golden chains from Tilly, drunkenly caressed each other in mockery of all time and tongues. The wits were requested to produce their choicest specimens at the appointed hour, at the Godown of King Seng. A dozen of the champagne bottles under the table, and party might be without data. Bad jokes, and I am positively envious and chagrin in stating generally that the guests included Englishmen, Frenchmen, Dutchmen, Scandinavians, Germans, Portuguese, Spaniards, Jews, Armenians, Parsees, Malays, Chinese, Bengalees, Javanese, Bugis, Siamese, Cochin Chinese, Chinese, Tamils, Telingas, Cingalese, Arabs, Boughese, Caffres, Tahitians, Hindoos from Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Kedah, Penang, Malacca, Singapore, Java, Borneo, Celebes, and Manilla. Chinese, Siamese, Peruvian, Apia, Javanese, Jews, Parsees, Chinese, and half-castes.

A TERRIBLE LIFE-DRAMA.

From the Rochester Express.

A somewhat romantic though young and thickly-domestic dream has recently transpired in this city, the facts of which are just sufficiently extraordinary and [illegible] to our knowledge by one whose intimate relations with the family rendered her familiar with the case. It possesses all the requisite elements of an exciting narrative, and in the hands of a professional romancist could be wrought into the most "thrilling" form. We feel that we violate no confidence in briefly presenting the case while omitting localities, dates and names.

Several months ago a respectable widow removed to this city from Syracuse, accompanied by her children—her only solicitude—a boy and two girls. The family were supported from the widow's income, which though moderate, enabled them to live in respectable independence. The eldest of the daughters was eighteen years of age, and the son was the youngest of the household. The girls were well educated and handsome, the elder possessing remarkable personal attractions. She was of a very passionate temper, and when roused, extremely willful and intractable. To her brother she was devotedly attached. He was effeminate and refined, and fully reciprocated her affection. They were almost constantly together, and seldom went away from the house except in each others company.

The family had resided in the city two weeks, when the eldest sister and brother attended a private party in the neighborhood of their residence. They there made the acquaintance of a young gentleman, who impressed the young lady so favorably that he was permitted to accompany her home. Afterwards he called by invitation. A friendship was rapidly formed, which soon generated a still warmer attachment, and in two weeks from the date of their acquaintance the parties were engaged to be married. The young gentleman's impatient ardor suggested an immediate union, although it was strongly opposed by her brother. With a singular foreboding of misfortune, he earnestly begged his sister to break the engagement, or at least to postpone its fulfillment. But his efforts were unavailing. The new comer seemed to have entirely supplanted him in his sister's affections, and at the expiration of two weeks from the date of the engagement, the lovers were married!

The bride was immediately removed from her mother's house, and the newly married couple set up for themselves in another dwelling. They lived happily for two weeks when the wife suddenly announced her intention of visiting a female friend in Syracuse. Her husband remonstrated and an angry colloquy ensued, which resulted in the husband's declaring that she would do so at her peril, and the wife with equal determination, asserted that she would go immediately, if only to show him that she could not be intimidated by threats!

Without further altercation, the husband went to his customary business and on returning, found that his wife had thus fulfilled her threat. She had left an unsealed letter addressed to her husband, stating that she would return the following day; that she had gone solely for the purpose of redeeming her word, and trusted his natural complacency, as well as her own, would be restored by their temporary separation.

True to her promise she returned on the day following, to find that she had formed a wrong estimate of her husband's character and had strangely miscalculated the effect of her proceedings. She was not admitted. She then sent for her husband and had taken every article of his private wardrobe, and she premise that he had left her never to return!

The immediate effect of this discovery was to awaken the most intense remorse. She flew to her mother's house, narrated what had occurred, and frantically implored her brother to hasten to Syracuse to recover her husband. This boy had not visited his sister since his marriage, but one glance moved him. He resolutely declared that he would find her husband, and compel him to return; and with characteristic energy, though in feeble health, he left home on the following day.

Within two days after his departure the second sister was prostrated by a fatal illness, which terminated in three days. Within two days after the funeral of the second sister, the mother was stricken down with the fatal illness, and died in three days. Within two days after the funeral of the mother, the eldest sister was prostrated by the same fatal illness, and died in three days. Within two days after the funeral of the eldest sister, the son died of the same fatal illness, and died in three days.

Within two days after the funeral of the son, the husband returned from Syracuse, and found the whole family dead! He was completely overwhelmed by the terrible calamity, and is now in a state bordering on insanity. The whole family were buried in the same grave, and the husband is now the only survivor of the family.

WHO IS LOUIS NAPOLEON.

Louis Napoleon is said to be the son of Hortense Beauharnais, by a Dutchman named Louis Bonaparte, who married Hortense by command of Napoleon I. Hortense was the daughter of Josephine, Napoleon's first wife, by her husband, Alexander Beauharnais, who was guillotined during the reign of Terror in France. Her eldest son died in the year 1831, in the revolt of the Romagna, and Louis Napoleon's Book, and that the present Emperor of the French is a person named Louis, who was a student of Geneva, Switzerland, and who was expelled from that city for participating in a political riot. The impression is also abroad that Louis Napoleon is a person of very limited education, and that his public documents were written by persons employed for the purpose.

SHOP HOURS IN PETERBORO'.

Well, what shall happen next? Truly this is an extraordinary age! "Time is fleeting!" "Steam" "Electricity" and "Progress" are words which have not been in Town for the three or four years, all of one of our prominent merchants, "Miserable," will they reply, and that in a tone that made me feel downright to see if it was really the person in question who had spoken. Oh, the miserly-like minded old elder. Did I say miserly-like minded old elder. Did I say miserly? I do not know whether the term will apply or not. I can submit you to be one of the greatest church-going men in Peterborough in a George-street merchant. "Well, Peterboro has improved greatly since I was last here," I heard the gentleman exclaim a few minutes afterwards. "It has improved a little," was the cool reply of our man of the yard-stick and scissors. Let us take a closer look at him and see if his appearance betrays any trait in his character that will account for the extraordinary nature of his remarks. I know him well; a more miserly individual cannot be found. Money, nothing but money for him. Money he wants, mostly he'll have, and the more he gets the more he wants to get! He can give him money and there is not a pleasure on earth to be found save money; but go and ask him for money—it would do you good to be looking at him then from behind a curtain—and see how he will look. He keeps only a limited number of clerks and to my own certain knowledge pays them most miserably. His shop is open at day-break in the morning, and it is not shut one long as he can get a customer to come and see him. It seems as if the day was not long enough for to make money in; he must work half the night, trying to do two days work in one. I do not believe that when God made the day and the night—two distinct seasons—He intended that man should work all day and all night too. No, I believe that if the day was made as a season of labor for man, night was made as a season of repose. I emphatically repeat that I do not believe God intended it to be so, and how any person of common sense can think otherwise I cannot conceive. When I think what a miserable life the poor clerks who are cooped up in most of our establishments in Town from 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning till 8, 10, and 12 o'clock at night have, and this every day in the year except Sundays and part of our holidays, my very soul burns with indignation against their miserably narrow-souled and miserly masters. I said some of them were kept till 12 o'clock at night. It would be well if this was the worst; but it is not. I can point out establishments in this Town where the Clerks have been until are often kept from 7 o'clock in the morning till 1, 2, and 3 o'clock the next morning. Such work as this is a sin, a shame, and a disgrace to any country that pretends to call itself a Christian, an enlightened land. God have mercy I say upon these miserable money-seekers who will have to answer for the blighted lives of the millions of poor clerks that will be laid to their charge on that last Great Day of Reckoning when every man will be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body. Surely 7 o'clock in summer and 8 o'clock in winter is early enough to open any shop, and if 7 o'clock summer and winter is not time enough to keep open I would like to know what is. I would ask what business is done after 9 o'clock in the morning. What business is done after 7 o'clock in the evening? I have often asked for some good reason for long hours, a question to which I have never yet received a satisfactory answer. Some say that the evening is the only time that the laborer and the mechanic have to make their purchases. This is only one of a thousand excuses adduced that they make for their cursed system of long hours. The laborer and the mechanic get to their work at 7 o'clock in the morning and their shops work is done at 6 o'clock in summer, and very often at 5 o'clock in winter. Any one who cannot make all his purchases between these hours and 7 o'clock does not deserve to be considered one. So long as they know that they can get into the shops at almost any hour they please they will take their own time to do it. Let the shops be closed punctually at 7 o'clock, and they will shut their doors at the proper time.

THAT THERMOMETER.

What makes a thermometer, is a question which is often asked, and one on which is manifested a great variety of opinion. Those who drink their tea, others think coffee, and those who abuse their noble, others regard as quixotic. But let us apply the words of the text that cannot err. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The majority of intelligent readers these remarks have caused their memories to run quick-ly and [illegible] and who have had [illegible] erected to them; to drop them a respectful tear. But what have they done to merit this? They have made wid-ows and orphans, and brought on numerous misery and destitution. Turn down they are not, although their names are toasted at public dinners, &c.—They only are truly great who take for the elevation of man, and not the destruction. Who are the living heroes in the service of tyrants, but in service of Him who is the instigating of all that is really noble and virtuous.

The Scottish Reformers and Martyrs were true heroes. Patriots they were in the best and highest sense of the term: for religion, liberty, conscience, and the public good. The spots on which many of them fell, and on which many of them fell, were scenes of peril, and there subsequent glory than that which gained of old on the plains of Marathon, or at the Straits of Thermopylæ. The record of their names and lives may perish, and the rude tablet that marks the hallowed spot of their glorious ultimate may moulder to dust; but their fame is deathless in the heart of every lover of Scotland, liberty and Scotland's Reformation. Their worth has a monument more durable than that of conqueror or kings, and which the lapse of time shall never be able to destroy.

Temperance Reformers are true heroes. Their object is great and heroic. They seek to raise the poor inebriate from the position in which he has been placed by a degrading and demoralizing practice; and many a one has been raised by their efforts from such a position and placed as bright ornaments in various positions in the world. The passions and appetites exert a powerful influence on man, and constantly demand obedience to their dictates. The mind and physical organization strive for the mastery. Many have blighted by intemperance and blasted by impure feelings and influences, have awakened to seek for happiness in the gratification of his bodily propensities and tastes: and they truly merit the name of heroes, who endeavour to arrest such a giant evil as intemperance.

The political Reformer whose aim is the good of mankind is well entitled to the name of hero. Those men who endeavour to reform the evils which spring from feudalism; who widen their high expectations were disappointed, and their plans frustrated, rose again triumphant with fresh life, and wrote from the experience of past failures with battled for "the right" in spite of the opposition of kings and cabinets, well deserve the gratitude and veneration of mankind.

Sabbath School teachers are true heroes. Sabbath Schools are an honor to any country, although in many cases the existence of such institutions has caused many a parent to neglect a duty devolving on every Christian—the religious instruction of their children. In them moral worth, and greatness are to be found. The requirements of a Sabbath School teacher is great. In them the sense of duty rises in opposition to self, and because duty must be discharged to Heaven self must be denied. Their work is great, and their reward will be great likewise. They with the spiritual and impenitence Reformers are not the only heroes on the world, [illegible] are often found among the meek and lowly; they are only known among the many. Wherever men are to be found striving for the moral and mental elevation of man, there also is true heroism.

ADDRESS of the GRAND ORANGE LODGE OF IRELAND, TO THE ORANGEMEN OF IRELAND.

The Grand Lodge, in pursuance of their usual custom, addressed their beloved brethren.

Under circumstances of more than ordinary pressure and anxiety they fulfil their bounden duty.

Although, during the existence of the Orange Institution, efforts have been unsparingly used, by its adversaries, to vilify and damage the society, yet in no former period of its history have intrigue, clamour, and fabrication been more assiduously exhibited against it, by the enemies of the throne, the religion, and the integrity of the empire.

In vain, hitherto, have calumnies been refuted; in vain has the sound portion of the people vindicated the principles and conduct of our society. There are many who remember an ombrafion who are indifferent to its denial; while others, unprincipled and unchristian, unceasingly renew the poison of falsehood and exaggeration.

There is, happily, a large number of sound-hearted and unbiassed persons who are not influenced by a prejudiced or designing opposition to a society whose constitution might at any time be found in the hostility and dread manifested towards it by the enemies of British rule and of the Protestant religion.

To such honest and independent individuals, we present our appeal for justice and support. We exhibit openly the laws and principles of our institution, and we claim a full approval of our identification with obedience to the laws of the land, with protection of property and life, and with the maintenance of civil and religious liberty.

Our principles have increased the whole British empire. It is now a developed fact, that, wherever the flag of England waves, there are Orangemen to be found, whose great services, disparaged or forgotten at home, are not ungratefully remembered and recognised in our colonial possessions.

It is our hope that, under the Divine favour, truth must finally prevail with regard to our beloved institution. Facts must find, in time, their just delineation. A day must come when Protestants will awaken to a sense of their numbers, their rights, and their just influence. A desire to hasten that good time is ever present with the Orangemen of the empire.

In connection with such an expected consummation, it is gratifying to assert that ere long it will be irresistably demonstrated that the numbers of the Protestants of Ireland have been designedly underrated; that their numbers daily increase by accessions from the ranks of Romanists; while the Romish population is also rapidly diminishing, from the decrease produced by emigration to other lands. From this joint action, it is evident that, in no very distant year, a majority of numbers must fall to the Protestants of Ireland.

The Grand Lodge cannot but trust to the good sense and love of justice which belong to their fellow-Protestants in England, for a righteous consideration of the claims of many Irish Protestants on behalf of their children. To deny them sympathy, and to tolerate systematic rejection of their claims for educational support, in case of these unparalleled violations of justice which dishonour the State. What is granted to English Churchmen and Dissenters, to English Romanists and Jews is perseveringly denied to those Protestants of Ireland—viz., aid on behalf of education, agreeably to the convictions of those who submit such support. Without at present approving or disapproving aid thus bestowed, it must appear marvellous in the eyes of all just men, that to some but to Irish Protestants is permission to instruct their children in God's Word systematically and invidiously denied.

Again, they look forward to the time when English Protestants will learn to trace many national disasters and disloyal demonstrations to the agency of those who are indebted for their education at the Colleges of Maynooth, to the ill-advised bounty of the Protestant of Great Britain and Ireland. Orangemen universally deprecate any aid whatsoever being granted to support a religion denounced by various pretended oaths as unworthy of belief and dangerous to society. They further call attention to the passing circumstances of the day, when, if an army consolidation of the Romish denomination, unobtainable healthy to the throne and honour of the empire is openly manifested.

The Grand Lodge cannot but invite attention to the recent significant circumstances which have taken place in Canada. There, while marked favour and privilege were bestowed on parties not recognised by her in Great Britain and Ireland, a great and deliberate insult was offered by a servant of the Crown to those who were loyally recognised by the local Government, who were present to welcome their Prince at the earliest invitation of the local authorities, and who were assigned by these a distinguished place in the arrangements of the day.

Not only the Orangemen of Canada but other Protestants of that great colony have arisen to vindicate their rights, and to denounce the lukewarm individual who presumed to supersede the Legislature of Canada, and the rights of the loyal subscribers. It was, finally, a return of the insult received by the establishment of them to whom loyalty and valour, only a few years since, it was due that Canada was not an, widely separated from the British Empire as are the United States of America.

And most especially do the Grand Lodge of Ireland entreat a most decided support of all the right-minded members of the British Parliament, at the approaching time, when, if there be justice and honor in human minds, the hundred sons of Canada shall be rejected. It is due them that their supporters shall be visited with a sentence which shall spare Her Majesty's subjects from such perilous responsibilities as those which might lead to the severance of what remains to us of America from the Crown of England for ever. The power which commits to dispense with law has already led to anarchy, where it sent a sovereign and his heirs all down to the chief right in England. A subject who dares to compromise his sovereign is treading on the downward steps of one whom story is ever illustrative of the folly which urged James hearts to assert their liberties and their honour.

They we see how, at home and abroad, Orangemen have much to bear—at home [illegible] abroad, they never sinking at [illegible] and such as are to gain all honour and all glory in a distance, yet happily and as one to defend all bigotry to an [illegible] its protestant attachment and unmitigated [illegible].

A time may come when men of intrepidity and honourable minds will look back on the history of these times, and admire the great fortitude and endurance of the Orange Society.

Assailed by truthless and exaggerated accusations; stigmatised and oppressed by an increasing denunciation of oppression [illegible] whenever the law only enforcement of every law which may curtail their liberty; beholding the wheels and doors of many lives which were professedly enacted for the protection of the national religion from the aggressions of Rome; such laws being enacted as a dead letter; outraged by illegal Romish demonstrations; subjected to contumelious public insult and assault; hearing irreconcilable speeches from the ecclesiastical chief and by subjects of the Roman Pontiff [illegible] indignant by the [illegible] appeal to a foreign ruler to invade and occupy our island; is it not to be admired that the Protestants of Ireland, and more especially the Orangemen of Ireland, are [illegible] and forbearing as they have ever been?

It is evident how few are the occasions wherein members of the society are accused of any serious or well-founded charge. Circumstances have often arisen, when, waylaid and surrounded by superior numbers, they have been constrained to defend themselves from the measure which had been designed. But there is no record whatsoever in existence of any time when Orangemen assembled in public or in private (however great may have been the provocations) to conspire against the lives of their murderous foes.

Nor can they conceal from themselves the violence done to all justice when, as it sometimes has happened, Orangemen, having been assailed and driven to contend for their very existence, by a perversion of all known administration of justice, they only had been acquitted are treated as murderers; the innocent are dealt with as if they were the guilty; and those who could not destroy them by ambush and violence, are invited to persecute them to prison and to banishment, by means of a public prosecution.

All this is hard to bear; and yet hitherto it has been patiently endured.

Our hope is in the omnipotent justice of Almighty God. Him our fathers trusted. By his blessing they endured until endurance was exhausted, and then came the day of deliverance and freedom. And as we aim not to exasperate our wrongs, or to be less enduring than we have been; but we learn from the plain records of human history that wrong cannot be endured without peril to the unjust and protest from the wronged: without remedy now, or recovered right hereafter.

Our hopes are animated because recent despotic and unconstitutional legislation has aroused the indignation of many Protestants by no means sympathising with our current action. This is natural and not without its suggestive consolation.

Our hopes are raised in behalf of our Romanist Irish fellow-subjects, when we have seen the wonderful proceedings connected with Italy's freedom, and with the heroic leadership of Garibaldi. The crowning glory of this great hero is found in his fearless appeal to his emancipated countrymen, when he proclaims that the enemy of the Gospel and of freedom is the Bishop of Rome. He has also appealed to Irish Romanists to free themselves from superstitious bondage. That Irish Romanists should see their way to religious freedom, to Gospel truth, and to such a mental and moral position as Protestants enjoy, is one of the dearest wishes of Irish Orangemen.

Our half-yearly deliberations are concluded. We have investigated our position, our resources, and prospects. We give thanks to God for our prosperity. Our vigilant central committee will not fail (during the interval which may elapse until next our meeting) to watch, faithfully, as they have ever done, over the interests of our institution.

Thus, if possible, more united, more resolute, and more awakened to our privileges and duties than ever, we abide by our institution, in all its laws, principles, and powers. It is more needed than ever; and to every suggestion from those who do not understand us, or from those who would supersede our confidence for their purposes of aggrandisement, we say, in the glorious declaration of Derry's Defenders—No Surrender!

"Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you!"

THE HILSTON MURDER.

SENTENCE OF DEATH.

At the Stafford quarter sessions, on 17th ultimo, the capital sentence of the law was passed upon Samuel Trigg, a haddinger, for the murder of his wife at Cauldy-cote, Hilston, on the 25th July last. The circumstances of the case were of the most painful character. The prisoner has been in the habit of treating his wife with great cruelness, and on the 25th July he left home, returning at one o'clock the following morning, when he had another row with her. On breathing at the door he was attacked by the wife, who [illegible] and the row ensued again, in the course of which the prisoner struck her on the head with a hammer. The woman heard the prisoner call the child down to assist some murder; and he said, "If her don't come down and cook us some victuals, I'll cut her throat from earth ear." The man went away, after which the prisoner's son came down; and on the prisoner's refusal to go to bed a patient was under his head on a chair, and he was left asleep. At a later hour the unfortunate woman crept down stairs, still was shivering the fire, when her husband said, "Come on, you b[illegible] Polly;" which he had no sooner said than he grabbed her in the left side, and said "Now I've satisfied; I have killed you." The blow was fatal, and the woman died in a few hours afterwards. This trial is one of the sad evidences of the effects of drink. Testimony having been given that the prisoner when sober was a good husband and father, and his letters to his relations and his children when in gaol attribute his problems to drink, and entreat them all to abstain from its use. His son, on leaving the witness box, said, "I hope, my lord, you will have mercy on my father." The prisoner's mother, too, who was in the gallery when the judge assumed the black cap, fainted out, and had to be supported. The solemn duty fell upon his lordship of pronouncing the awful sentence. It is understood that the execution will take place on the 8th of January.

THE METHODISTS OF ALABAMA ON SECESSION.

At a meeting of a [illegible] members of the Alabama [illegible] of the Methodist church, held in Montgomery, December 1, [illegible] following preamble and resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, we minister of the Alabama Conference of the [illegible] church South, having, under ordinary circumstances, no [illegible] do with the political [illegible] being foreign to the great work in which we have engaged; but regard the present perilous condition of our common country as a crisis in public affairs calling for unity of action among the people of the South; and whereas, we conceive it our duty, as well as our privilege, to give expression to our views; therefore,

Resolved,—That we believe African slavery, as it exists in the Southern States of the republic, to be a wise, humane and righteous institution, approved of God and calculated to promote to the highest possible degree the welfare of the slave.

Resolved,—That the inauguration of any political measure which looks to the overthrow of this institution, or friends in any quarter, or at any time, however distant, for the removal of this servile element of a dependent relation, which is their true normal estate, into one of whose duties and responsibilities they are incapable, not only by [illegible] by a blind fanaticism, which will not listen to reason, but madly destroy those whom it attempts to aid.

Resolved,—That as in the Providence of God, several million of the African race have been committed to our care as a people, we should be recreant to that trust if we did not defend our right to our service against any and all enemies now and forever.

Resolved,—That the election of a sectional candidate to the Presidency of the United States, upon the plain advocacy of principles utterly subversive of our rights, can only be considered as a declaration of hostility on the part of a dominant majority towards the people of the South—a declaration, in fact, if [illegible] dissolves the compact of union between the States, and drives the aggrieved party to assert her independence and maintain her rights, at all hazards within the last extremity.

Resolved,—That our hearts are with our brethren of the South, and should they ever need our hands to assist in achieving our independence, we shall not be found wanting in the hour of danger.

Resolved,—That we place our lives and our fortunes upon the altar of our State, content to abide in her prosperity, to share in our adversity, and determined as far as in us lies, to preserve her honor unsullied.

EXTRAORDINARY SUICIDE AT ALDERSHOTT.

On Friday afternoon week, an inquest was held at the Queen's Hotel, Aldershott, before Mr. Payne, touching the death of Samuel Wallen Hillier, Paymaster sergeant in the 9th Lancers, who had committed suicide by shooting himself the previous morning. It is stated in evidence that the deceased destroyed himself by firing in his mouth a pistol loaded with blank cartridges from the effects of which he died almost instantaneously. It appeared that [illegible] was a defaulter to the extent of £27, and the following letter address to a comrade was read:—

"Dear Cliff,—I suppose I'm the last man in the world you would imagine to commit such a deed; but, under my unnamed guilty, I have been frightfully miserable for the last six months. * * * * Besides, what have I to live for? My poor mother, the only person on earth I cared for in deed. As to death, I look it as calmly in the face as I would a number I report. It is a most remarkable thing, but I really do believe in a future [illegible]. About ten days ago I took an ounce of laudanum—enough to poison a horse. It had no effect on me. After that I took eight grains of opium; again no effect, except a slight [illegible]. Then four grains of morphia; no effect. I then took five grains of Liq. Opiat. Lithiatis, with the same result.—My last mode of exit is a sure one. I know the exact position of the heart, and if a ball doesn't penetrate the centre it is strange to me. I can assure you will say, "what a fool to do such a thing," but my life is truly miserable. When I went to London and heard for certainly of Jeanie Johnson's marriage with a man I have above all men, I was nearly driven mad, for, although parted from her for more than six years, I love her more than ever, but can't excuse her for marrying the man I hate. Good bye, good bye, Cliff. God bless you.

Yours, not perfectly sane,

(Illegible)."

When the coroner had concluded the reading was about for some hours, and the jury returned a verdict of felo de se. The deceased was [illegible] and respectably connected, and was very popular amongst the soldiers by his cordiality of disposition.

MURDER OF A FRENCHMAN AT NAPLES.

A letter from Naples gives the following account of a murder committed on the person of a young Frenchman who had just embarked. A deputed number was committed here the night before last. In the evening a young Frenchman went in a carriage to the Golden Archer coffee-house, which he soon afterwards left with three persons in Garibaldian costume, whom he had met there. He and his companions got into the carriage, which remained at the door, and drove to a neighboring restaurant.
